The Daily British Whig.

Optim per Orbem Diem. MONDAY EVENING, MAY 23, 1877.

A pleasing feature of the recent celebration of Her Majesty's birthday was the fact that, on this continent, it was by no means confined to the Dominion. Throughout the United States British residents did not fail to publicly manifest their unfeigned affection for Queen and country. Then, too, St. George's and other British societies and gatherings were not left to themselves in these demonstrations of regard for Victoria the Good. In many instances American citizens united with their exile neighbours, on the Queen's natal day, to pay the homage of a joint admiration for her many excellencies—a graceful tribute to royal worth and a gratifying proof of international good fellowship besides.

A curious conjuncture of events promises to occur here next week. It is pretty generally known that Barnum the showman is to send or bring his colossal exhibition hither a week from to-day. The Barnum of Canadian politics, originally announced for an appearance here to-morrow evening, has deferred his coming for a week, doubtless in deference to his distinguished American compeer. Surely we are in luck. Two such shows may not again happen so close together for many a day. It is a coincidence not only rare but exceedingly appropriate. Each of the great showmen has a reputation for being unrivalled in his chosen sphere. If our neighbors can show nothing greater in this line than Barnum, so neither can Canada produce in this respect the equal of the Chiefest. We give a flat and unequivocal contradiction to the malicious rumour that there has been any collision between the great show men as to the timing of their exhibitions here. One of them has not been subsidized to follow the other.

GRAND TRUNK STATION.

For a long time no project has been set on foot involving more important interests than the proposed Grand Trunk Railway City Line and Depot. It is quite unnecessary to ply the usual arguments to prove the utility of the project, and even vital to civic prosperity. It is sufficient to remember that all the great centres of industry, population and wealth have become or remained such by means of ample railway accommodations. Within our own Province of Ontario, the city of Toronto furnishes an illustration of a liberal railway policy, accompanied and followed by a rapid growth in wealth and numbers. The recent triumph of the municipal by-law, granting a bonus to the Credit Valley scheme, is a proof that the citizens of Toronto have still an unshaken faith in a railway system as a grand contributing agency to the prosperity of their city. The Kingston and Pembroke enterprise was for a new departure in the same direction. This local project has already resulted in an impetus of growth and prosperity in spite of the fact that it was launched under the unpropitious circumstances attending a general depression. The spirit of enterprise which asserted itself in the initiation and prosecution of this local enterprise, has already gone far and done much to correct the laggard reputation which it has been the unenviable fate of this city to bear. The suburban situation of our Grand Trunk Station, at the first blunder and misfortune, still remains a very material drawback to that property to which this city is fairly entitled. The really surprising strides we have lately made in architectural improvement and general advancement are not sufficiently known to outsiders, many of whom, on a hasty authority, have formed but a poor opinion, and flippantly express themselves in terms of disparagement of everything Kingstonian. The outlook from our part of the way depot has served only to confirm among the travelling class the too prevalent opinion that Kingston is slow and incurably incapable of improvement. The stream of traffic is carried by us, or behind us, as it happens a distance from our back doors that there is but a poor chance of correcting the impression that Kingston is proverbially behind the age, no matter how obsolete and unadvised that reproach may lately be. The city is for the most part virtually buried from sight of the travelling public, only excepting the few who come to us at considerable inconvenience to visit us for business purposes. Were the station located where it ought to be, the change would, without doubt, be followed by a rapid increase of our population, enhanced value of property, enlarged volume of the civic revenue, and an appreciable impetus to the general prosperity. The Kingston at the terminus of the great-est lake chain, and at the source of one of the finest rivers of the world; its beautiful surroundings waterward, unmatched, we venture to boast, by those of any city at least in Canada; the agricultural and particularly the rare mineral resources of the background, all taken in conjunction for Kingston, which may yet be developed and realized. Among the means most likely to place Kingston in its true position we do not hesitate to specify this close connection with the Grand Trunk Railway. Were this great artery of commerce free to pass through instead of round the city, a sensible invigoration of all our material interests would immediately ensue.

Should the change be effected, three routes seem open to the choice of the city, viz: one to the water front, effecting a junction with the present branch line at the freight station; another to reach the city via Union Street, with the Depot opposite the Court House, while the third route mentioned lies further back crossing the old commons, now being rapidly built up, on the city side of Williamsville, in which neighborhood, in all probability, the proposed Grand Trunk works would in any case be located.

DISSOLUTION.

The addition of a new party to the immediate dissolution of the House is not so much a matter of course as it is a matter of course. It is a matter of course that the Opposition of the country could result from such a step. If the Ministry are really getting more and more unpopular every day, it would seem that the better policy is to let them sink as low as possible before delivering the finishing stroke. There is nothing they are likely to achieve next year by giving them any chance of retrieving their utterly depraved characters. The opposition will have the advantage of another year's discipline in the virtues of purity and self-reliance, in which they have not by any means attained pre-eminence. Three or four years in "the shade" is far too short an apprenticeship for any set of men, especially after so long a term of dalliance in the lap of luxury. Sweet as the use of adversity, as the Mail should be prepared to admit, and, therefore, the Liberal Conservative party ought to take their fill of it while they have the opportunity. It is not a matter of course, however, that the fish-pots of Egypt already, even before the taste of them is well out of their mouths. They must learn in patience to possess their souls, and not, like the "lady" of the "lady" test too much, lest people should begin to suspect that there is something sinister in the display of so much obsequiousness. A man once remarked that he did not believe anyone in the House of Commons would be elected by the Opposition, and similarly the electors may have their doubts about the existence of such perfect prudence and disinterested zeal for the public good as the Conservatives seem to possess.

Sir,—No doubt the duties of a public prosecutor are looked on with suspicion by the public, but so long as people do not conform to the laws, or endeavor to evade them, such an individual is a necessity. —But to the purpose. In regard to the woman named Collé, I beg to state, and am ready to make oath of the same, that before I laid the information, I enquired of him personally if he was Dr. Chester Curtis, of Chatham, or if he was registered in the name of Collé, the only person registered in the name of Collé. He replied he was not that gentleman, nor did he know that person, but that he came from Percy. Appearing to answer the charge on the information laid against him, he distinctly stated to the Court, he was that person. If the gentleman had replied to my enquiry, stating he was the person, he would not have been proceeded against at all. And when I was ordered to proceed, I concluded he was not on the register. Yours obliged, J. G. M. May 26th, 1877.

RUSSIA'S PROBABLE DEMAND.

The Independence of Turkish Provinces. London, May 23.—This morning's budget is singularly void of interest. The present bill may be regarded as protracting an impending storm. In spite that a quarter a decisive battle is impending. The second Turkish line of defence—that of the Balkans—is now being prepared for an emergency. Troops to the number of 60,000 infantry and 5,000 horse are being concentrated in Shumla in readiness for a forward movement, not expected for a month. A strong force has been sent to occupy the delta of the Pravad, through which the Varna and Raskh Railway passes, and which is consequently a position of the highest importance. In Asia Minor battles may be looked for at any moment in the neighbourhood of Erzurum, at Batoum, and at Olti. The Russians ceased bombarding Kar on Thursday, and since then several military engagements have occurred in this vicinity and elsewhere. The invading force continues to advance upon Erzurum, from which Mukhtar Pasha has been compelled to retire. Its operations, as well as those of the whole army in Asia Minor, will be materially facilitated by the removal of the obstacle created in its rear by the insurrection of the Circassian tribes of Trans-Caucasia, whose surrender is announced—from Constantinople. Mukhtar Pasha is asking for reinforcements in the south, as the Russians appear bent on occupying the valley of the Euphrates.
