Indigestion.

When a patient says, "My food does not agree with me; it sours on my stomach, and my appetite is treacherous. I suffer great distress after eating certain kinds of food, for which I have a great liking. I have to be careful as to what I eat," it is Dyspepsia, and the least of the suffering is upon the stomach, the origin of the trouble, for this condition produces the most disagreeable train of symptoms in its aggravated form. The stomach is in active sympathy with the brain and nervous system, and Dyspepsia produces nervous prostration, gloomy forebodeings, nightmare, depression of spirits, sexual exhaustion, sleeplessness, as well as many other indications of a breaking down of the general vital forces, all in sympathy with the stomach.

Electricity, properly applied, will cure it. It begins from weakness, from a lack of vital activity in the secretory glands of the stomach from a want of sufficient gastric juice; hence, a remedy which will arouse these parts, stimulate them into action, infuse them with vitality, will cure the cause and the disease. Our treatment will do it. The study of years has taught us that the stomach is, in health, a veritable galvanic battery. It generates electricity, which is heat, warmth. When it breaks down it carries every other vital organ with it. Dyspepsia comes when its capacity has been over-taxed; it is not able to furnish the energy needed. Hence, a steady, gradual infusion of electric force into it renews its power, arouses its inactive function, revives the secretive action and restores the machinery to a healthy state. The stomach begins anew to throw out sparks of electric life to the whole vital system, and a state of perfect health is re-
