Citizens Vs. The City.

The citizens, generally, have removed the snow from the sidewalks fronting their residences. What about the city? Has it done its share of the work? A glance at the street crossings, from which not a particle of snow has been removed, answers the question in no uncertain way. Surely the city should do its share, when it compels citizens to do theirs. It very unpleasant to wade through the deep snow on the streets, and reflect, as you do so, that the powers that be compel you to keep your own portion of the walk clear.
