> The New Year's Answer. By Ellen Whitney Clark. Oh, speed thee, happy New Year! Speed swiftly on thy way, And tell us of the wonders Beyond the gates of day. Lift up the mystic curtain, That screens from mortal view The portals of the future, Which none may wander through !

Oh, teil us, happy New Year, What gifts thou bast in store ! Will plenty be our portion, Pressed down and running o'er? Will every hope we cherish Meet with fruition blest, And every cup be honeyed, Which to our lips is pressed?

Will springtime send her garlands To wreathe the woodlands fair Without a single blighted bud Among the blossoms rare? Will summer send her roses Her pinks and gentian blue, Nor drop among the posies, One single sprig of rue?

Oh, will fair Ceres bless us, In basket and in store, And into granary and bin Her golden treasures pour? Will glad Pomona greet us, With free-will offerings meet, And shake from bending orchard trees, Rich trophies at our feet? Will every eve be smiling,

And every heart be light, And every household happy, -And every bearth-fire bright? Will grief no longer rankle, And care no more annov, Nor friendship's gold foe mingled, With falschood's base alloy !

"Alas." the New Year answered. "Such was not nature's plan; The wonders of the future No mortal eve may scan; But this let each remember .-Life cannot all be play; And clouds must follow sunshine, 'As darkness follows day!

"For joy would lose its savour, Unmixed with grief or pain. And hope would cease to cheer us, If dreams were never vair. The cup of honeved sweetness Upon our taste would pall. If with the sweet was mingled No bitter drop of gall.

"No lot, however tranquil, Can be misfortune-proof. And life for each is weaving varied warp and woof. "Twould mar its wondrous pattern, By Nature's hand prepared, but one tiny sprig of rue Or blighted bud were spared!"
