INDECISION.

I love her! Words cannot express
The joy with which her presence fills me.
The soft touch of her hand, her dress
Against my arm with rapture thrills me.
I yearn to call her mine but still
(Excuse me if my sorrows trouble you)
She says I am her dearest Will,
And writes it with a lower case w.

Fresh as a rosebud newly born,
With morning's dew drop still upon it,
Graces that ne'er did queen adorn,
Worthy of a poet's noblest sonnet.
A heart as sunny as a bird's.
Ah! were I free my life to pledge her!
Were I but sure she'd bind my words
Sweet as the heroes of the ledger.

I sang to her an old, old song,
(An excellent hint from Coleridge taking).
The tale of one whose heart had long,
With hatred love been slowly breaking.
I ceased, but though upon her face
Love, pity, sudden's shame were blended
Instead of Genevieve's embrace,
She only murmured, "That's splendid!"

Queen of home arts she seems to cast
Sunshine and song 'round all who meet her.
No ray Madonna of the past
Was ever purer, gentler, sweeter.
A home with her—but no, I fear,
It cannot be. How could I bear
To hear her play your utter year,
Rosina's piece—the "Maiden's Prayer?"

Rev. Mr. Stafford on Sectarianism.

Belgravian Independent.

From a quarter which, to say the least is unexpected, there has come a demand for religious freedom seldom excelled in boldness and vigour of language, and with it an almost equally vigorous denunciation of sectarianism. The Rev. M. Stafford, of Lindsay, is the writer, and the circumstances which led to the publication of the letter are lucidly described. He says:

"I think it is time to call the attention of the teachers and people of Ontario to a practice becoming too common at the annual meetings of the Teachers' Association in the city of Toronto—that of seeking to create prejudice in the minds of the teachers against the Catholic religion. A few years ago one reverend doctor, also a principal of a college, began his address by expressing a wish that the Ontario teachers, then in convention, might be protected in their deliberations from sinking into such a depth of folly as that reached by the Vatican Council."

The rev. gentleman cites other illustrations of the same practice, and dwells especially on the attack made by the Rev. Mr. MacVicar, the President of the Presbyterian College, Montreal, With these matters it is not necessary now to deal. Mr. Stafford disposes of Mr. MacVicar in a manner which must be unpleasant to that gentleman, and stamps upon him the brand of bigot in the most legible letters. But with this we have little to do. The matter which is important to the public is that our public schools should be preserved strictly unsectarian. Whenever any attempt is made such as that of Mr. MacVicar, to prejudice the teachers against any particular religious denomination it should at once be exposed and defeated. Mr. Stafford is justly indignant at the course pursued at these Teachers' Conventions. Two thirds of the Catholic children of this Province are educated in the public schools, and for a convention to seek to prejudice teachers as a body against the Catholic religion is obviously unjust and improper, as I can only be excused on the ground that the teaching body, including such men as Mr. MacVicar, though sufficiently well acquainted with their business, are profoundly ignorant of everything outside of it. This journal is not expressing the opinions of only a few when it declares that it views the whole of the school system of this country with grave apprehension, and entertains serious misgivings whether the system is not cultivating exactly the wrong faculties. Modern education is absolutely Godless, and instead of developing the moral faculties and producing good men and virtuous women, it is devoting all its energy to the development of cleverness, cuteness and smartness, qualities which, alas, develop too quickly without any school cultivation. The present system is really only an experiment. We are testing the plan of educating our children and excluding from that education morality and religion. Whilst this experiment is being made it would be a shameful injustice to permit any action to be taken calculated to prejudice the teachers against any particular sect of denomination. This Mr. MacVicar, and some others attempted, and Mr. Stafford comes down upon them with an ecclesiastical horsewhip which in his hands cut pretty deeply. The following passage from Mr. Stafford's letter is sufficiently explicit and incisive:

"I am a Canadian by birth and I am proud of it. I am a Roman Catholic by faith and conviction and glory in it. Both as a Canadian and Roman Catholic, I claim for myself the civil rights of this country common to all its citizens and perfect freedom of worship. I claim this also for every Roman Catholic child and man in school and out of school in Canada. There can be no liberty of any kind without religious liberty. To have this liberty in the country we must have it in the schools, and to have it in the schools we must have it in the teachers, for the teachers make the school. Are the public schools in Ontario unsectarian? We are told they are. Then at the convention of the teachers of those schools let no man dare to stand up and single out the Roman Church or any other church for special attack and attempt to make it odious in the sight of the teachers or the public. We will not submit to any such outrage. We will look on all that is said of the unsectarian character of the public schools as a sham and a fraud, and to the Catholic a delusion and a snare, and we will call on Catholic parents everywhere to withdraw their children from under influences and inspirations such as those I am here combatting and place them where the pearl of their faith—that which is dearer to them than life—may be known and respected."

PACIFIC RAILWAY SCHEME.

The Mission a Part Failure The Imperial Guarantee Withheld.

That the mission of Sir John A. Macdonald and his colleagues has been a failure is, we think, certain. They went to England with the purpose of letting the contract for the Canadian Pacific Railway to great European capitalists, who were, it was hoped, to be associated with one or two noblemen, having more or less connection with, or at least knowledge of, this country. No doubt if, as it was at first rumoured, the Rothschilds and the Erlangers had come under bonds to construct the road, we should have had not only a solid security but one that would have been recognized as such throughout the world. We suspect from the intimations in the English newspapers, however, and especially from a notice in the Economist, that these men stood upon an Imperial guarantee as a sine qua non of their entering upon the engagement. It is true that Morton & Co. and a French financial Company are still said to have a share in the undertaking, but though these are both respectable concerns, their names do not carry the preponderating weight which belongs to the other houses, who declined, apparently, after carefully weighing the proposition made to them. An Imperial guarantee would have been reasonably demanded by our Government; and, more than that—a substantial contribution in money, but it was quite obvious that Sir John's Government, with its present policy, could not obtain either of these advantages from the Government of Mr. Gladstone. Nay, we do not believe it would have been possible to obtain it from the Government of Lord Beaconsfield. It is fair to add that it is, at least, doubtful if Mr. Mackenzie could have done so, though it is certain that Mr. Forster, an influential member of the Cabinet, openly declared himself in favour of pecuniary assistance to the Canadian Pacific, on condition, however, that she should discontinue her legislation against British trade. We have stated fairly the fact as to the English negotiation. What has been done might just as well have been done six months ago at Ottawa, with the same parties, and with none of the expenses of the European trip. The gentlemen, on whose behalf the contract has been signed by Mr Duncan McIntyre, are, we believe, substantially the same who have been so successful in carrying out the construction of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway.
