VERY POOR TOGETHER.

We were very poor together, Mary—
A war-smitt flock was mine;
Two cows alone was all the dairy,
In happy days long syne.
At noon, I was no happy thane,
To tread the harvest mead anent
At eve, to clasp thee once again,
When we were very poor.

On the castle on the hill was glowing
With many a window bright
And many a crystal cup was flowing
With ruby wine to night.
But on the hearth our little cot
Sat bright as, dark and damp;
For I was happy with my lot,
For Mary was my lamp.

I have gains! The golden gear and I wreak
Two a coat of wealth and cheer.
But no one waits me on the doorsteps
Like the one I used to know.
O, give me back my wee wife,
My sturdy flock on the moor,
Or say has left me lone in life,
Since we were very poor.

A BLIND CLIMB.

A Sightless Man Successfully Scales the Heights of Mount Blanc.

Mr. F. L. Campbell, of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the blind, Upper Norwood, himself a blind man, writes to the London Times the full account of the ascent of Mount Blanc last summer. He says: "In company with my son, with Benoit as my leading guide, I attacked Mount Blanc. At first my guides expected to drag me up, but I gave them their choice to leave me to climb in my own way or give up the undertaking. I was resolved to make an honest climb or give up the ascent. I took my place on the rope in the ordinary way, except that the distance between my son and myself was only a few feet. This enabled me to follow his foot-steps closely, and in such places as the very dangerous ones even near the ground plateau we moved in immediate succession. For instance, before he would take the fingers of his right hand out of the hole which had been cut in the ice wall for the purpose, my left hand would touch his right hand and be ready to occupy the hole as soon as he had relinquished it. With the exception of cutting very excellent steps for me, the guides during the ascent did not assist me in any way. I was glad to find that such steps places as the Bosse were much easier than I had anticipated. The cutting of steps required considerable time, and allowed me at my leisure to prepare for each difficult and dangerous step. Besides carrying a strong alpenstock I always take with me an 'Scout' cane, a short walking stick, which I often use in my right hand as an indicator, and to show the skill which it is possible to attain in this way I may mention that I did not miss a single step in the entire ascent. When I reached the summit Benoit said, 'Welcome to the summit of Mount Blanc. You are the first and last blind gentleman who will ever stand upon this the point in Europe.' But my mind was busy. Passing from peak to peak, I went the entire circle, dwelling on many favourite summits. They had all been carefully studied, and each in its turn brought some new winged hope for the future. It was very cold, and the guides soon reminded us that we must begin the descent. In difficult climbs I rely entirely on my own careful steps and the strength of my own arm, but in making descents it is otherwise, especially over snow slopes. Here I take the guide's arm, and my alpenstock in the other hand I bound down with great rapidity. We made the descent from the summit to the Grand Mulets in three hours and thirty minutes."

Justice to a Black Brute.

Last Friday afternoon Mrs. Benjamin Wynn, wife of a wealthy stock dealer in Clinton county, Kansas, was horribly outraged by a negro named Henry Bird, who had been for three years in Mr. Wynn's employ. The lady who is about 26 years of age, was returning from the village of Grayson, twenty-nine miles east of this city, and when just by the gate the horse was stopped by Bird. He took her from the saddle and threw a handful of mud in her eyes, blinding her. The brute then caught her and throwing her riding habit over her head tied it with the halter rein, after which he ravished her, in the most brutal manner, being naked at the time and daubed with mud to disguise himself. He fled after the deed, and the lady, with difficulty, freeing her head, regained her horse and rode back to Payson and reported the outrage. Within an hour two hundred men on horseback started out in search of the villain, knowing only that a man covered with mud had committed the deed. Bird put on clothing and joined the party, and was one of the most zealous in the search. Near Edgarton Junction, one of the men discovered some mud on the back of Bird's neck, and shortly afterward another member returned from the scene of the outrage, with a man's sock, which in the hurry had been left behind. Bird was taken into custody and ordered to strip himself, and it was found that his back was nearly covered with mud, and he had on one foot a sock that matched the one found on the ground. At 12 o'clock next day Bird's body was found by some passers by, hanging to a small elm tree near Payson.

EASTERN WAR CLOUD.

A Glance at the Position of Affairs—Turkey Helpless Financially.

(Montreal Witness.)

Is the great settlement, the long talked of final solution of the Eastern question in Europe at hand? Is the succession of events since the Berlin treaty about to end in war? Turkey has at last been driven to the wall, and we are told that she "has placed her back against it and is determined to die hard." The war spirit is abroad among the Christian nations. From England we hear talk "of the most sanguinary and atrocious war since Waterloo," as being imminent, and that "in any case the fleet must not retire disgraced, rather would England take up the matter single handed than that her most effective arm should be discredited." Such words as these are ominous, but England is not alone. The German Ambassador has, in a long interview, made a great effort to avert what now appears inevitable, as he has not succeeded in moving the Sultan to repentance. The Russian Consul at Montenegro, on the other hand, is keeping Prince Nikita in hand. While the diplomatic body has thus failed to bring about any pacific agreement, the military forces are face to face. Prince Nikita, with seven thousand men, says he can take Dulcigno from the Albanians if the Turkish regulars are not allowed to interfere, while six thousand Albanians stand confident. Behind these are, on the one side, Admiral Seymour and the European fleet, and on the other Riza Pasha and the Turkish army. The Sultan has declared to the Ambassador that he will not give up Dulcigno in the face of the demonstration, and Riza has declared his master's will to the Admiral. What chance is there of a pacific settlement of the Dulcigno question in view of this attitude? The only chance is that the Sultan may not yet have grasped the truth that Europe is not only serious, but determined, and, more than all, united upon the immediate and total surrender of Turkey on this question. But as this is in any case only preliminary to the much more important and humiliating cession of Janina to Greece, Turkey probably feels that she may just as well fight it out with the aid of the Albanians on the small question, as without their hearty aid on the Greek question which would only come up later. It looks as if Mr. Gladstone were going to have an opportunity of expelling the Turks, bag and baggage as he said, that is, if he can accomplish it. It is, however, no such easy task. Financially the Turks are helpless. Their diplomacy is simply an easy way of solemnly promising everything and doing nothing. But in savage fighting the Turk is a match for any man, and more than a match in some respects for Christians. Turks can probably throw torpedoes or get them thrown as well as Englishmen, and are much less likely to have scruples as to their murderous effects. It would cost the Turks no pang to slaughter every helpless Christian in Turkish cold blood. The only thing that hinders this is that the Christians are probably too numerous to kill. The Sultan, perhaps, relies greatly on being able to stir up the Mohammedans of India, and it is impossible for us to judge the merits of this element in the contest, but it seems possible enough that, before the Turks are sent out of Europe bag and baggage, they could give more trouble to the allied nations now demanding concessions than they would at all like to commit themselves to.

Irish Legislation.

Mr. Mitchell Henry, M.P. for Galway, writes to the London Times, explaining the motion he intends to propose in the House of Commons next session for the appointment of an Industrial Commission to aid in the development of the resources of Ireland. The chief objects he contemplates are: (1.) The reclamation of waste and semi-waste lands by the agency of labourers, who would be paid weekly wages for a year, families being afterwards settled on the lands at rents calculated on the capitalized outlay of purchase and wages. (2.) The experiment of tapping some of the large, deep bogs of Ireland by the process of tunnelling at the base or outlet of the dry water-courses, always found in bogs. (3.) The formation of light railways as feeders to the main trunks with which Ireland is already tolerably supplied. (4.) Lastly, the development of fishing industries by the construction of harbours and piers.

The Commissioners appointed to inquire into the working of the Irish Land Act have issued a query sheet dealing with the subject under eight headings, the principal of which relates to Ulster tenant-right and the sale and disposition of holdings outside Ulster. A good many of the questions touch the acknowledgment by the landlord of a right of sale of interest at the expiration of a lease, and one of them pointedly inquires how the section in the Act of 1874, which gives compensation for disturbances, has been effectual to prevent eviction; also, whether this right to compensate has induced tenants to mortgage their holdings to secure
