PSALM OF THE BALD HEADS.

Tell me not, in merry accents,
That I have an unthatched roof;
'Tis the hairy head that lacks sense—
Baldness is of thought a proof.

Hair is vulgar, hair is useless,
And to brush and comb a bore;
Making life but dull and juiceless,
I need brush and comb no more.

Not for wise men matted hair is,
Black or brown or red is fair;
Let the savage of the prairies
Waste his time in raising hair!

Life is short and hairs are numbered,
And, though fibs are hardly borne,
Still at night I've always slumbered,
When the nightcap I have worn.

In the world's broad field of battle,
Who'll be at the barber's call,
Listening to his tiresome tattle,
Better bare as billiard-ball.

Fear no future, bald-headed brother,
You were bald in infant days,
Crave not hairsuite or another
Brain it is, not hair that pays.

Lives of great men all remind us
That our smooth and polished pates
Leave all hairy heads behindus
Let us thank the leveling fates!

Footprints of Old Time's fleet waste,
No one sees on our sin-soth crowns;
Mind no more the idle talking
Made by anxious mop-headed clowns.

Let us, then, O hairless brother,
Proudly through life's pathway roll,
We remember that dear mother
Earth is bare as the pole.

AMERICAN EMIGRATION.

The Way the Republic is Being Built up and Strengthened.

N. Y. Herald.

In the fifty years between 1830 and 1880 nearly eleven millions have been added to the population of the United States from this source. But the mere arrivals do not correctly represent the contributions which have been made. Unlike the Chinese the European immigrants are not of one sex, but of both sexes, and they obey the primal command to "increase and multiply." The marriages of immigrants are more fruitful than those of our native population, owing partly to the fact that they are more frugal livers and do not so much feel the burden of large families, and partly to the fact that the emigrating classes are the most energetic portions of the stock from which they come, and being full of health and vitality they have an abundance of children. The actual immigrants amounting to nearly eleven millions. Their offspring must have doubled the contribution to our census returns.

The money which these immigrants have brought with them must amount in the aggregate to a large sum, but this is a bagatelle in comparison with the wealth which they and their descendants have created by their labor. It is not extravagant to say that the mainspring of our prodigious national growth is the great tide of stout hearts and strong hands which has flowed in upon us from Europe. The liberal policy of our Government, in admitting strangers to all civil and political privileges after a short residence, has had the happiest effect. We have no jealousy of race; we tolerate all forms of religious worship; we open all employments to capacity and industry, and by making this chosen heritage of freemen the paradise of immigrants our country has become the marvel of the world and the admiration of the laboring classes in every land. In the second or third generation our immigrant population becomes thoroughly assimilated. In spite of these large accessions we are substantially a homogenous people. We are certain to be the most composite people on the globe, uniting the most energetic elements of all races and climes.

A Malicious Mother.

Here's more of it. Mary McKenna, of New York, deeply in love with James E. Gillen, of the same city, at last determined to marry him in spite of the maternal remonstrance. Accordingly, without the knowledge of Mrs. McKenna, the couple were united in due form, but without much ceremony, and started housekeeping in a limited way. Previous to the marriage Mary had saved twenty dollars which she kept at home in a tin box, and, with a view to having something with which to meet the emergencies of married life she took it with her. Promptly upon discovering that the girl had the money the mother ran to Justice Paterson and caused the arrest of the daughter for theft. When the case came before him and the testimony of the mother and daughter had been heard the Justice asked the former if she was willing to swear her daughter had lied, and was met with the ready response that she would swear that or anything else. With an impatient exclamation the Justice discharged the accused girl and she went away to commence housekeeping with the pleasant reflection, that it wasn't her mother's fault she wasn't honeymooning it in the penitentiary for a year. It's an old story, that true love never does run smooth; but lately love seems to have had a particularly rough course.

MOUSSEAU V. OUIMET.

How the Latter was Distanced in the Race for the Cabinet Stakes.

A story comes from Ottawa which shows that Cabinet-making, like horse-racing, has its competitors for prizes into some peculiar tricks. It is known that the Hon. Mr. Mousseau and the Hon. Mr. Ouimet were keen competitors in the race for a Cabinet seat. On the day pending the Government's decision these two gentlemen were in conversation with some friends on the subject of their candidature, when Mr. Ouimet remarked that if Sir John should appoint Mr. Mousseau he would congratulate Sir John upon so doing. The other asked him if he were in earnest, and upon Mr. Ouimet answering in the affirmative suggested that they should address Sir John a joint letter to the effect that the appointment of either would satisfy the other, and this was agreed upon. Meantime a Montreal friend, who had present and heard the remarks, slipped down to the telegraph office and informed Sir John that he had heard Mr. Ouimet say to Mr. Mousseau that he would be glad if Sir John would appoint him (Mousseau.) A few hours afterwards came a message for Mr. Mousseau to go to Ottawa, and the public knows the rest. Mr. Ouimet is said to chafe under such treatment, but of course there is no suspicion that Mr. Mousseau had any hand in the trick. It was played by a gentleman not new to such measures, and who holds a position under the Provincial Government, who was connected nearly or remotely with the notorious Land Swap, and who sticks to his friend.

Selection of Breeding Stock.

The art of breeding may be summed up in the one word, selection, or it may be expressed in the common rule of good breeding—"Always select the best." To be able to tell the best is the most difficult point in the breeding of farm stock. The successful breeder must have a clear idea of the qualities sought, and the quickest and best method by which such ends may be reached. He must necessarily be keen of sight to observe the good and bad points, and the causes by which they have been brought about. His judgment must be of the best to suggest remedies for defect, and new method for bringing out valuable characteristics. "He will prove himself the most successful breeder who can select with the most correct judgment." Edward Hammond whose breeding in sheep has been so successful, once said, when asked what proportion of the rams bred by him self he would willingly use in his own flock answered, "Not one in three hundred." This is but an instance of the care, skill, judgment, and, we may add, present sacrifice exercised by the true breeder. We have said that in profitable breeding the selection must be for a distinct and well defined purpose. The first principle in stock breeding was the selection of animals adapted to the circumstances of the given farm, its size, quality of food, etc. The ancients knew that the breeds of animals that had lived for a long period of time on a hard fare and a poor soil, would do better on moderate land than those that had the highest kinds of keeping. Animals are much like plants, as they do not thrive well if transplanted from a rich to a poor soil.—American Agriculturist.

Gambetta's Childhood.

The tale that Gambetta, when a child, voluntarily put out his right eye in order to be removed from a seminary which he abhorred, is pronounced an absurd fiction. The real facts are that one day, when only eight years old, while looking at a cutler boring holes in the handle of a knife with a drill fastened to an old broken foil by a piece of catgut, this rude machine gave way by reason of too great tension, and the broken foil struck the right eye of the child with great force, perforating the cornea. This terrible accident, caused him to be one different from his kind
