Come, listen to me, landsmen. Who shooze at home at ease. And I'll relate a story

Of dangers on the seas. Twas Friday last, a party Of gallant ones and fair To spend a jully season, To Collingwood repair.

At midnight we embarked there On a boat the "Pioughboy" hight, And some of us were very tired, And some of us were light.

Right joyens were we all I ween. We laughed, we drank we sang. And " an excellent plane's" tones Through the cabin gaily rang.

But, glas for human hoping, And the polka just begun, A sudden clap of thunder put A stopper on our fun-

The night grew black and stormy. The clouds were dark and thick. The waves were rolling mountains high And all aboard were sick. "Steward oh! Steward" one exclaimed

"Bring a basin for my daughter. She's always sick when there's conside " Perturbation in the water." The dance was all forgotten.

To their state-rooms hurry all And" basins, Steward, basins," We every one did bawl. But now a passenger espied

Astrange una outed sound Right down to the muchinery Or somewhere there arous The Engineer is summoned, Gives a glance and then a sigh

And shouts below " Jurn ou The steam immediately. The storm increaseth, hope diminisheth. The wind it howled tremendously.

The storm grew on apace. And all believed that night they ran, With silent death a race. For who could see that gallant ship! The fomay waves ride o'er

She'd surely go on shore ! . The voyagers take the precautions. They closed the drinking bar-room up To stay an awkward funk, Should future Cor'ners inquest bring

A verd et, found deud drunk. The merry sounds that eke awhite Did help to give us sport. Were hushed now, for to the mast

And tell not if she got on land,

They lashed the plane-forte. But ab I alse I another sound Did now safute our ear ;

It shook the ship and made us quake, And broke the chandelier. A seaman rushed into the room Where stood we half distraught? And ecreamed the happy tidings out

And now these anxious moments past The danger safely o'er. I'll ne'er go board. I'll bet my boots, The Ploughboy any more.
