TURKISH BOYS AT SCHOOL

Tricks They Play Upon the Hodia, Some Astonishing Things Taught. The beginning of a Mohammedan boy's school life is always made an occasion fon a festival. It occurs on his seventh birthday. HE FOOLED HIMSELF.

How One Wall Street Man Was Holst With His Own Petard.

"A number of years ago," said a Wall street man, 'some men came from out the west to float a scheme in Wall street. One of the most successful brokers of that day was asked to take it up, and he, after consideration, agreed. The agreement was that the stock was to be placed in a pool controlled by the broker. This stock was to net $15 per share to its owners, and the broker was to have whatever he could get above that figure, article in which he takes that stand. But | and no questions were to be asked or inquiries made as to what he was doing. 'So the game started, and presently atories began to fly about concerning the stock, and they were very rosy stories as to what the future of that particular stock was going to be. In the meantime considerable trading had been going on, and finally it became for the time being one of the stocks that occupied the attention of brokers and customers alike. The treasurer of the company, who had put 2,000 shares in the pool, one day, when the stock was selling at 38, rushed into the broker's office and, after excitedly expressing his belief that the stock was going to 50, stated that he had just purchased 1,000 shares. "Now, the freasurer knew ten times as much about the intrinsic value of the stock and the inside workings of the company as the broker did, and the broker knew that it had little or no value at all. Yet the treasurer, carried away by the rumors which he himself had ordered started and which he himself knew were untrue, fooled himself and had actually bought the stock at an absurd figure. anything since. The treasurer lost more on the 1,000 shares he purchased than he made on the 2,000 he put in the pool, and yet there are those who will say that 'Hungry Joe' wasn't right when be created the epigram that there was 'a sucker born every minute. New York Tribune.

Why He Didn't Call, A gay and festive youth who is employed as a clerk in the Pennsylvania railroad office had occasion to go down to Wilmington, Del., one evening, and while there he met a girl who impressed him as being worthy of cultivation. L. asked if he might call and was assured that he would be welcome. "I live in New Castle," she said.

"But where is New Castle?" he in-"Oh, anybody can direct you," she replied. "We live in a great big stone house, the largest house in the town." He was forced to be satisfied with that. On Sunday he took a run down to New 1 Castle, and when he inquired where the young woman lived the big jail was pointed out to him. "That's where she lives," said one of the town boys, "Her father's one of the jailers." The young man took the next train back .- Philadelphia Record.

For comprehensiveness of statement I give the premium of unqualified admiration to a merchant in a small town south of Fargo. The "town" consists of a railroad station, two residences and two stores, both of the last mentioned one story buildings of about 20 by 40 feet.
