MISTAKES IN MAKING CHANGE. Any Hard and Fast Rule Respecting

Correction May Work Badly. Last Sunday morning a lady in heavy black attire, carrying an umbrella, a fan and a prayer book, took an electric car at the station and sat down in the seat next the rear door. When the car reached the point of her destination, the conductor had just gone forward to take up the fares. She signaled him to stop and held up a bill to pay him. The conductor took the money and without a suspicion of impatience handed her back the "You should have come for my fare carfrom the distant crosswalk. "What's discomforts, it is perfectly well recthe matter with her now?" asked a youth on the rear platform, "Kicking about her change," growled the conductor. "Ring the bell and go on," returned the first speaker. "She has a right to what is due her," exclaimed a young woman with spirit. All was silent in the car as the mud as rapidly as her long skirts, prayer book, fan and umbrella would let This reminds me of an incident which I witnessed some years ago in the Old ; Colony station. There was at that time a very stuffy and ill mannered ticket sell, er at the window, One day he sold a ticket to a suburban passenger, who paid for it with a bill and gathered up his change and passed on a few steps before he counted it. Then he came back and called across the line of people who were buying tickets, "See here, you have made a mistake in giving me change." The ticket seller burst out upon him abusively...
