"As I told you, Miss Baxter, the project is so difficult that your failure, if you do fail, will merely prove it to have been impossible, because I am sure that if any one on earth could carry it out you are that person, and, furthermore, I am very much obliged to you for consenting to attempt such a mission."

And thus it was that Jennie Baxter found herself in due time in the great capital of the north, with a room, in the Hotel de l'Europe overkooking the Nevski Prosp.ct. In ordinary circumstances she would have enjoyed a visit to St. Petersburg, but she was afraid to venthre out, being under the apprehension that at any moment she might meet River Colony, and the British are at Lord Donal Stirling face to face and that he would recognize her. Therefore she remained discreetly in her room. watching the strange street scenes from her window. She found herself scrutimining every one who had the appearance of being an Englishman, and she had to confess to a little qualm of disappointment when the person in question turned out not to be Lord Donal; in fact. during her short stay at St. Petersburg she saw nothing of the young man.
