A Radical Sunday Address.

Fierce antagonism will be awakened in people who can see temperance only in total abstinence by an address delivered by the Rev. Algernon S. Crapsey, an Episcopalian clergyman of Rochester, I.N. Y. He argued that vice was merely lumorganized virtue, and not to be des troyed, but to be converted into some by H. H. thing else and better. He particularly objected to the creation of what he called artificial sins, and instanced, as doing exactly that, the early Sabbath laws of New England, the result of which was a reaction against any Sabbath observence at all, and the present contention of many well-intentioned people crime against the state, nor is it a sin God. By endeavoring to make it a sm I those who have the cause of temperance at heart are doing much to injure that cause. Men take a very great risk, when they make a definition of sin which condemns the best and noblest men that ever lived, among them the founder christianity. It is this intemperate ad vocacy of the cause of temperance which has done much injury by bringing the sale of wines and other spirituous I quors into disrepute and so caused the Mallen very evils we all so justly deplore. In this as in all other cases, the true remedy for the evil is by conversion and not destruction. What is wrong for one person is not necessarily wrong for all persons. Manufacturing artificial sins is simply to array against yourself a vast number of men who would otherwise on your side. Let your neighbors alone. Incidentally, Mr. Crapsey made a savage attack on churches that move out of streets where poverty and sin abound and go to aristocratio streets where everything is pleasant and respectable.
