French Joe Tied the Knot, and He Did It In Rhyme.

Wild and romantic as any highland legend or border story is the account of the first contract marriage in the interior of Alaska, as narrated by "Windy Jim" Dodson, who was present and witnessed the unique ceremony.

It was on the banks of the Dall river, a small stream which flows into the Yukon near Fort Hamlin. A young man, Gillis, by name, accompanied by Aggie Dalton, a charming maiden with whom he was in love, had set out from the mouth of Dall river to go across the mountainous divide into the Koyukuk valley. As they started up the Dall they met Dodson, and in the course of conversation it developed that the young people were anxious to get married, but in that wilderness there was small chance of finding either priest or magistrate to perform the ceremony.

"I know a man who can tie the knot," said Dodson, "and he lives only a few miles from here. His name is Joe Durant, but everybody knows him by the nickname of 'French Joe.' "

To yearning hearts and youthful vigor a few miles in that vast solitude was as nothing, and they were soon at Durant's place. Dodson went with them as guide and witness. The spot was one just fit for such romantic nuptials. It was on a wild, mountainous slope, by the side of a clear lake and under the shelter of a STRIKERS USED friendly tree whose evergreen branches friendly tree whose evergreen branches defied the chill November winds.

Durant gladly agreed to perform the ATTEMPT TO BLOW pleasant task, but as he had no law form or church rituals at hand he devised a form of his own and put it into rude | One rhyme, having the bride and groom each repeat four lines after him.
