Those who desire a permanent quently asked the very same ques- young men from the Italian quarter, profitable means for utilizing antiquated or discarded bicycles or any of their component parts. There might be a highly remunerative field for some genius who can devise useful employment for the wheels, frames, and other important in rts of the bike's make-up; but, then, don't know where the genius could be able to collect his abandoned machines. Certainly not from the manufacturers or their agents, cause I never knew one of them who was burdened with discarded or outof-date machines which could be sold so low that a genius who wanted them simply for their material could make a profit out of the deal.

"But that's not answering your question. Most bicycle manufacturers will tell you that the old wheels drift away in lots of small size, some the rural districts of the United States and Canada, some Italian trade, which at one was quite extensive, and others to the countries of South America Mexico. Many old-fashioned wheels are sent by any own particular factory to the southern states, the colored people being the principal pur-

HANNAY & HAROLD These are carefully repaired, re-cinearly as good order as when they were sold, and it is seldom, indeed that a wheel is in such poor tille as to render its renovation impossible or unprofitable. The machines are then sent to stores and are kept in beginners or are placed in establishments in the neighborhood of good roads and pleasure resorts to second-hand wheels, where used by our stores, are a great aid to salesmen in disposing of first-class machines. For instance, a man or woman who does not know how to ride comes to one of the warerooms and wants a wheel.
