There Are Ilmes When the "Second Self" Actually Seems to Exhibit a Foresight -Emptions That Seem to be Wholly Automatic - secondary (o sciousness.

Many instances are on record where the second self has actually seemed to exhibit a foresight beyond that of the individual proper. One such is that of Lady Eardley, who, in her account of the matter says: "I went to the bathroom, locked the door, undressed and was just about to get into the bath, when I heard a voice say, 'Unlock the door!' The voice was quite distinct and apart from myself, and yet it seemed to come somehow from inside myself. I was startled and looked around, but of course no one was there. I had stepped into the bath when heard the voice twice more, saying, 'Unlock the door!' On this I jumped out and did unlock the door, and then stepped into the bath again. As I got in I fainted away and fell down flat in the water. Fortunately, as I fell, I was just able to catch at a bell handle, which was attached to the wall just above the tub. My pull brought the maid, who found me (she said) lying with my head under water. She picked me up and carried me out. It the door had been locked, I would certainly have been drowned." The records of the Society For Psychic-al Research tell of a queer adventure that happened to the wife of a clergyman, Mrs. E. K. Elliott. She says: "I received some letters by post, one of which contained $75 in bank notes. After reading them I went into the Litchen with them in my hands. I was alone at the time, no one being near me. Having done with the letters, I made a motion to throw them into the fire, when I distinctly felt my hand arrested in the act. It was as though another hand were gently laid upon my own, pressing it back. Much surprised, I looked at my hand and then saw that it contained not the letters I had intended to destroy, but the bank notes and that the letters were in the other hand. I was so surprised that I called out, 'Who is here?' but there was nobody."

In ordinary life certain actions seem to be wholly automatic—for example, dressing or retracing a well known path. They plainly indicate the existence of a separate train of memory employed upon out one's knowledge, they are certainly conscious acts. Perhaps there is no more familiar illustration of the operation of what is termed the secondary consciousness. When, under some circumstances, a man has reached a certain stage of intoxication and is anxious not to betray the fact-perhaps because he is in the presence of ladies-he will keep a most careful watch upon the "other fellow" in order to be sure that the latter does not do anything out of the way. Here, apparently, is a case of partial separation of the two personalities. The subconscious mind seems to be responsible for W the wonderful faculty displayed by calculating boys, who do not know how they? solve the mathematical problems offered to them. An Island In the Air.

Three miles south of the Mesa Ennearly 400 feet high, 70 acres in area on the fairly level top, indented with countless great bays, notched with dizzy chasms. The following anecdote of Henry Clay was told by one of his personal friends: While making the journey to Washington on the National road, just after his dency, he was traveling one stormy night, wrapped up in a huge cloak, on the back seat of the stage coach, when two passengers entered. They were Kentuckians, like himself. He fell asleep, and when he awoke found them discussing his chances in the coming campaign.

"What did Harry Clay go into politics for?" said one. "He had a good bit of land; he had a keen eye for stock. If he had stuck to stock raising, he'd have been worth his fifty thousand. But now he doesn't own a dollar." "And," the great Kentuckian used to add, "the worst of it was, every word of it was true!" It was characteristic of the man that at the next stopping place, he hurried away and took another coach, lest his
