ANDREW CARNEGIE CENSURES TWO NATIONS.

King Returns From Abroad With Utcided Opinions Regarding the Justice of the Two Conflicts-Prosperity for America is Assured for Another Year. New York, Nov. 10.—Andrew Carnegie and Mrs. Carnegie were passengers on the White Star steamship Oceanic, which ar rived yesterday from Liverpool. Mr. Car-negie appears in good health. He said to a reporter that the stories that he intended to become a subject of Great Britain were without foundation for, he said : "Where man's treasure is, there his heart is also." Speaking of the present war between Britain and the Boers, Mr. Carnegie said Great Britain had brought on the war by her desire for gain.

"The war against the Boers is most infamous and unjust and it was brought about by Britain's lust for wealth and is on a par with our at:ack on the poor Filipigos. These two attacks are a disgrace to both branches of our race.

BATTLE OF ELAN LAAGTE.

A Description of That Now Famous Encounter.

London papers contain full ac counts of the battle of Elandslaagte Gen. French took the imperial light horse and the Natal volunteer artillery (six guns) and four companies of the Manchester regiment, in an armoured train for a sortie for Elandshaagte station. From the plateau overlooking the dip in which pox. the railway station and coal fields are situated the Boers were seen and surprised. From an opposite ridge Cabin—$50 and upwards, single; return, $100 and upwards, according to steamer and berth. Second Cabin—$35 and $37.50, single: $66.50 and $71.25, return, according to steamer. Steerage—To Liverpool, London, Londonderry, Queenstown, Belfast or Glasgow, including ontiff, $22.50 to $25.50, according to steamer. the enemy fired accurately with two Midship saloons, electric light, spacious profield battery and 5th lancers, and at three o'clock in the afternoon the force moved slowly. The Boers opened fire with Maxim guns from entrenchments, on a ridge from five to eight hundred feet above the level of the plain. It was a succession of hillocks, one above another like gigantic steps. The lancers and light horse cleared the way for the infantry in advancing. The Manchesters led, followed by the Devonshires and Gordons, a long and slow march, and it was nearly four o'clock before the infantry could extend along the shoulder of the hill. They were met by artillery fire, responded to by the field batteries. After this duel had lasted half an hour the mounted Boers drew off as Wards. Return, $100 and upwards. Second if in retreat, hoping to draw some of the attacking force into a trap The Boers ceased firing and the British artillery prepared for an infantry assault. Thunder clouds gathered around ight of bursting shields showed as if at night. Then rain fell in a deluge The Devons were met by artillery fire but pushed stolidly forward. cutting the wire fences. The lines were extended as far as possible, be ing the only method by which they could face the Mausers and Maxims fire. Nothing finer than their un daunted front could be imagined. The Gordons, on the left of the Manhesters, marched steadily in column of companies until the bouldered nek of the enemy's ridge was reached. about three-quarters of a mile from the Boer guns. The Gordons had to face three successive ridges. times foiled in places, driven back, vet righting themselves, the troops steadily pushed forward. The first idge was almost a shambles. Men had fallen fast. It had ceased to be a general's battle, everything depended on company and even on section commanders, and gallantly the officers and non-commissioned officers did their work. If the men wavered or stuck under cover the officers sacrificed themselves as an example. The Boers stood their position with a grim persistency that was magnificent, and their stand at the last ridge was one of the finest pieces of fighting in modern wars. In spite of the united attack they checked the advance for half an hour. There was at that time more of daylight, and the Dutch were making their final stand. The bugles rang out the advance, fixed bayonets gleamed among the boulders, and An Enterprise Meat Chopper the men sprang up to the wellknown notes, only to fall like rabbits. Again and again the call sounded. Cheering madly the infantry men scaled the breastworks and passed a quick-firing gun. The brow of the hill was reached and someone shouted "Remember Majury the leager with bayonets. A white handkerchief floated at the end of a rifle. The enemy had surrendered, but the main remnant were nouring over the hillside, where the British cavalry pounced upon them. The captured guns were British. Gen. French was in command throughout. British strength was 3,200; Gen. Ian Hamilton commanded the infantry.

Acetylene Gas. Acetylene for illuminating is fast taking the place of other illuminants. It is a gaseous compound evolved from calcium carbide by the application of water. The carbide is made by fusing lime and charcoal at a high temperature in an electric furnace. When this carbon is brought in contact with water acetylene gas is immediately produced. The gas is generated in a special apparatus, and being carried through pipes to proper burners forms the most brilliant illuminant yet discovered. It is cheaper than any other artificial light; it is without the glare of the arc lamp, the reddish glow of the incandescent electric loop, the ghastly green of the Auer mantle, the flickering flame of the ordinary gas burner or the offensive odor of the oil lamp. flame is white and steady, and so nearly resembles sunlight that all shades of colors are accurately distinguished by its rays. Acetylene possesses hygienic advantages as the atmosphere is not vitiated by carbon dioxide which is given off in large quantities by ordinary gas Acetylene is not poisonous, hence there is no danger from asphyxiation if the light should be blown out. Acetylene is not effected by heat or cold, hence is especially adapted for lighting cars, street and carriage lamps. No special skill is required to operate the generator; each house holder can control his
