"No," said he, "and I'm not go-ing. I am afraid they might send me somewhere out of the thick of things. I don't want them to know I'm here, I'm going wherever it's liveliest. I'll be certain to find somebody under whom I have served, or with whom I have fought, and so I'll see the best of it.'

"And that was the man who told ae that out of 100 men with whom he studied for the service, seventyfive are dead already, fifteen of illnesses and sixty of bullet wounds and spear thrusts !

"It is disgusting to leave these men and turn into any one of the Cape Town hotels to find yourself surrounded by the rich refugees from Johannesburg, and to hear them cry like children as they tell you what they will lose if the British do not hurry up and take the Transvaal before the Boers destroy Johannesburg. They actually cry in their plates at dinner, and half-strangle themselves by sobbing as they drink their whiskey at bed time. The Mount Nelson, the Queen's, and the Grand hotels are all full of these merchants and millionaires, faring on the fat of the land, idle, loafing. all of every day, and discussing what per cent, of their losses the British government will pay when they put in their claims at the end of the war. "Some came here as clerks, some as laborers in the mines, and some are merchants who brought £10 worth of goods out from Birmingham a dozen years ago. They tell you that they have left $100,000 worth or £80,000 worth of goods in their shop, and that altogether £25,000,000 is in danger of destruction in Johannesburg. "Oh, mine Got !" one has just

"They are pulling their long faces all over the place, and shedding their tears wherever you meet them. It is enough to make a statue ill to have to hear and see them and move among them. Why don't they equip a regiment of rough riders or make up a battalion of volunteers among themselves? Why don't they fight The war has jeopardised their property, and they have a keener interest in it than any Tommy or any officer now at the front. How can they see the cream and flower of English manhood rushing down here to spill its precious blood for them. and never feel a blush of shame or a pang of emotion except grief over losses which will still deave many of

'Really, Cape Town is a wonderfu place. It is worth the journey to see the streets blocked by able young men, and the hotels crowded by rich refugees, while each night's train takes out the fearless gentlemen who are deliberately risking, not only their lives, but more of worldly advantage than can ever come to these skulkers who cling to the shelter of England's guns, and weep while they wait for men to die that they may rush up to the British treasury with their claims.

"If the exhibition these refugees are making in Cape Town were as important as it is conspicuous, one would think the Englishmen in charge here would drop the contest where it is and go home in disgust. But it is only a phase of a side issue, quite apart from the principle
