WHAT THE WAR HAS COST.

BRITISH WAR OFFICE HAS SPENT ALMOST $50,000,000.

follows: The British war office has expended almost the whole of the $50,000,000 appropriated by house of commons for the war. It is accruing liabilities. The chancellor of the exchequer, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, is said to be highly dissatisfied with the system of expenditures adopted by the war department, and there is considerable friction behis department and that one In fact, charges are rapidly accumalating against the war department and it is recognized that one inevitable result of the war will be its complete re-organization. The military chiefs complain of interference from the civil heads, and say that the policy of the treasury prevented the war department from keeping pace with the other European powers in many important respects, par ticularly quick-firing guns.

The military chiefs insist on the necessity of establishing an espionage system in continental countries. voting a special secret service fund

The Salisbury government intends to dissolve parliament early next year, probably in March or April-or when Pretoria is taken-hoping to reap" advantage from the present jingo furore and secure a fresh lease of power. Unless there should be some unexpected calamity causing a re-action in public feeling, it is taken for granted, because of the hopeless dissensions among the liberal leaders, that the tories will sweep the country again.

Kruger's wealth was estimated at $125. Four Month's Supplies-Arrangements for 000,000 and his ungovernable greed Provisioning the Troops in south Africa of gold is no doubt the reason why he, personally and governmentally. New York, Dec. 5.—The London squeezed the Uitlanders so mercilessly, correspondent of the World cables as even when he must have seen it was laid. ing to the ae truction of the republic While he and his co-delegates were in England negotiating the convention of 1884, a quarrel among those to whom he had entrusted the +ffairs of state in the Transvaal developed to such a degree that his supplies were stopped. The delegation's fands ran so low that they were unable to pay their hotel bill. A' this crisis a far-seeing Englishman, who had been to the Transvaai, and taking not of the concessions which a paternal government was granting, held out the benefits that would accure to the country and themselves if a concession were given f.r a wool washery and a woolen factory If such a monopoly was granted they would pay the hotel bill, and Kruger himself would lose nothing by the transaction The bargain was made, the hotel bill was settled and a cheque for £1,000 was given to Kruger himself. The machinery was ordered, but while it lay at the docks ready for shipment a friend who had had experience of Transvaal meshods, urged the concessionaries not to ship the ma chinery till the arrangement was confirmed by the volkeraad. It was well they heeded this advice for the volkerand refused to ratify the concession. When asked afterwards to refund the money the foxy Kruger said he had received the little attention as Stephanus Johannes Paulus Kruger and not in his capacity as president of the Transvaal. Personally he could do nothing, and to this day the money has not been refunded. Now, this concession was to have included a tract of land of seventy five square miles, and b was the intention to licate the works on a stream of very clear and soft water known as the Witwater, and this tract
