In Cuba the cry comes that the American army is suffering the tortures of the damned because of inefficient leadership. An invasion of the island has been attempted before the army has been prepared for it. A force has been landed and carried forward, amid boil and pain and death, until the hills surrounding Santiago, and three quarters of a mile of it, have been reached. Then a halt is made. Progress cannob occur without the siege guns (which have not been landed), and the artillery that are still at Tampa. The commissariat department, too, has been deficient, and for days the men on the field have been without food, and wet with rains and dews, and unable to sleep while under constant fire, theirs has been a trying position. What has been the ing? It may be extremely hard to locate, but it is traceable. The American army has a commander who has been going to the front for some time. L'AXIM'S AERIAL TORPEDO.

A New Instrument of Destruction Offered to Uncle Sam.

Hudson Maxim, a brother of the inventor of the famous gun, has offered to Probably Hudson Maxim has as intimate acquaintance with explosives as any roy, the dynamite cruiser that took part in the Brazilian war. He is the joint inventor of the Maxim-Schupphaus smokeless cannon powder that is now used by the United States, and of maximite, a compound used in shells.

This wonderful smokeless powder of his has solved the question of firing high explosives. It is the powder that is used in propelling his aerial torpedo. This powder is a compound of gun cotton and a small proportion of nitroglycerin. Contrary to what one might expect, it doesn't explode from concussion, and indeed it does not explode at all, and this is its specially effective quality. There is a decided difference between powers that burn, liberating expansive gases gradually, and those that explode and discharge their gases at onco. The nonexplosive powder exerts a more even pressure on the projectile, and consequently it can be used in firing a projectile containing a more highly explosive compound.

The gun for firing the aerial torpedo is similar to the ordinary rifled gun, except that it is of greater diameter in order to take the aerial torpedo. This torpedo consists of a steel shell from 5 to 10 feet long, according to the charge to be carried. The diameter is twice as great as that of other guns, being from 15 to 27 inches. The charge consists preferably of gun cotton, which may be fired by his powder with perfect safety. It is exploded by means of a fuse after the manner of orditorpedo may be thrown a distance of nine miles. It contains half a ton of compressed wet gun cotton, capable of destroying a battleship within an area of 47,000 square feet—that is, within a radius of 100 feet | set. from the point of explosion.

A gun to throw this torpedo would weigh 46 tons. This is less than the weight of many heavy guns of the present type. An English firm is prepared to build one for £7,000, and Mr. Maxim has offered to provide a gun that will throw 1,000 pounds of gun cotton nine miles and erect it anywhere in the country and supply it with any number of torpedoes, provided the government will agree to purchase it if it fulfills all the conditions.
