NEW YORK, July 9 - A London special to the Post says: "Information reache me to-day om a high diplomatic quarter that the unprecedented action of Germany in marshalling her whole eastern squadron at Manila is the prelude to a decisive step My informant, who cannot well be misin formed, says that a decision already has been arrived at in Berlin to occupy one of the Philippine islands as a coaling station in the far east, which the kaiser said re cently was vital to Germany's position as a great naval power. Further decision as to exactly which island shall be occupied awaits prince Henry's arrival at Manila, whither he is now bound, but at most will be only a question of weeks. The Bri tish government can hardly be unaware o these German diplomatic expectations, supported as they are by naval preparations. THE BANK OF SPAIN.

It is natural to suppose that the Bank of Spain is something like the Bank of England or the Bank of France, but nothing could be much further from the truth. In 1829 private individuals secured from Ferdinand VII the first charter for the Bank of Spain. This charter was renewed in 1856 and again in 1874. The present charter expires in 1921, if the bank survives until that time. When granted in 1874, it was intended that it should expire in 1904, but the government, while not recognizing the institution as a bona fide part of the crown, at the same time has continually made it a "convenience" for securing royal funds and willingly extended the charter limit 17 years.

The capital of the bank is limited to 150,000,000 pesetas. A peseta is equivalent | bridge. to 19.3 cents and the practical equivalent of a franc. The French monetary system was introduced in Spain in 1859 and the | Welland canal. old Spanish name peseta was retained for the unit (the franc) and the peseta is divided into 100 centimes. In our money the capital of the Bank of Spain is $28,-

Spanish law requires that the minimum surplus of its bank shall be 10,000,000 pesetas, or $1,930,000, not an extremely large sum when it is considered that the entire financial brunt of the Cuban war and now the war with the United States has been forced upon the bank by the crown. But as a concession to the private individuals interested in the bank and who, it may be presumed, are not sufferers by any condition of the bank today, its note issue is limited to only five times its capital; hence to 750,000,000 pesetas, or $144,750,000, provided the amount be not in excess of four times its metallic reserve. Its notes are legal tender and isand 1,000 pesetas. The only paper money in Spain consists of the notes of the Banco de Espana, and they are so depreciated in value today that exchanged in American money their worth would be that of curios for a rare book of scraps.

Spain, although not adhering to the only 7,500. A week ago the force was Latin union, adopted the same monetary only 4,000, but they were augmented by a system in 1868, in reality a readoption o the French system accepted in 1859.

SPAIN'S HISTORIC BANK. right to act as an agent for the crown and to issue notes the crown reserved to itself the right of coinage. The Bank of Spain may issue paper as a promise to pay, bu cannot produce either silver or gold coin save as the government dictates. In addition to the gold coins which the crown has placed in circulation there is the 25 peseta piece of 8.06451 grams and 900-1,000 fine. The ratio of silver to gold is 15 1/4 to 1. Silver coinage was suspended in 1878, except on government account. The Bank of Spain may circulate its notes in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippine islands if it wishes, but has not done so to any great extent. The Bank of Spain since 1874 has enjoyed a monopoly of issuing notes. The whenever occasion demands, and the very | died from the injuries.
