Although the Canada gained one-half minute on the run from home to the third buoy, the Merrythought gained thirtythree seconds on her on the first round trip. The Zelma gained quite a lead on the Aggie and Vreda on the finishing le third place. On rounding the home buoy the Vreda ran away to leeward to not clash with the Aggie, but on coming about she ran into the track of the Aggie, which keeping on the straight run forced the Vreda to fall away. This threw her between the Merrythought and the Canada. It was a remarkable race between these two favorites, and it was a matter of close speculation as to which would get the race. The Merrythought, the heavier boat, apparently had a slight advantage in beating to windward, but the Canada picked up her loss when running before the wind. The other three in the class kept well together and made a catchy race, but on the second round they dropped back fully half a mile behind the first two leaders.
