Paré Relates Many Details of Robbery.

HIS LIFE ABOUT NAPANEE.

HOW THEIR WAITING TIME WAS SPENT.

Mackie and Bosch Told the Witness That a Man in the Bank Was Willing to Aid Them All He Could. The latter refused to aid an American Bank—Suspected That His Movements Were Watched—Writes a Letter to Gus Porter—Great in Details.

NAPANEE, Aug. 3.—The afternoon session saw a yet larger crowd of spectators in the court room than on previous days. The heat was oppressive, nevertheless they bore the confinement with as much composure as was possible and sat fanning themselves throughout the whole afternoon. Ladies composed the greater portion of the audience.

Paré again took the stand and Mr. Porter continued the cross examination, starting again at Belleville, where he left the prisoner at the close of the afternoon session. Prisoner said he was accompanied by two men who went on to Belleville with him, and remained there an hour or two. They went on to Montreal; the two men were left at Cornwall, and they came down the next day.

The rest of the story was very much the same as told to O'Connell yesterday. Road and Holden went with him and witness stopped at Kingston while Road and Holden went on to Belleville to consult with Mackie. Prisoner was asked by Porter to give him a sample of his writing and was asked to write:

"Montreal, May, 1897.—Dear Sir: I am writing to consult with some sharps, but I can't say much just now. You know Detective Wilkes and Dougherty. If I hear more I will try and let you know. Yours truly, GEORGE PARÉ, or 'Old George,' of the baseball club."

The letter was written in a clear, bold hand with considerable flourish on the capitals, and the prisoner seemed much relieved when it was finished. Prisoner was shown a page of a letter which he identified as his handwriting, which ran as follows:

"Montreal, Oct. 26, 1897.—Hon. E. Gasparé, Dear Sir: A conspiracy is forming here in Montreal against your client, Mr. Paré, by some sharps of all reputes, well known here. They are waiting to connect with Detective Wilkes and Dougherty. If I find out more I will let you know. I remain, sir, respectfully yours, 'Old George,' of the baseball club."

Mr. Porter made Paré admit that he wrote this letter and seemed much pleased over the admission. In relating the finding of the money in his house in Montreal he said the first search they found nothing, but the next day they found ninety-six or ninety-seven bills in secret slides under the trays and some more in the coal box in the yard.

"I had four upright blocks," said the witness, "and those pieces I had bored and filled with what money I did not need. These were also found. I had also some good money in the Merrimac bank and $270 in the Manchester bank." The prisoner stated that he knew eight days before arrested that they were after him. He went to the bank to deposit some $20 or $70 and amongst the bills was one of the 40,000 issue, and the teller called his attention to the fact that the bill was not good. It had the signature of the manager forged. He went home and hid what he had of the bills in the tool chest with the intention of drawing out what he had in the bank, but every time witness went to the bank there appeared to be a change around, and he knew some one was dogging him.

"I intended to draw it all out but the opportunity never offered and in a few days I was arrested. I was told by inspector O'Dowd that they had found some of those unsigned bills and asked me where I got them and I said: 'I could prove it to you.'"

"Mr. Thornhill came from Boston the same day I was speaking with O'Dowd. In the evening Thornhill told me my sister, Mrs. Saucier, had been arrested in St. Thomas. Just at the time of the unsigned bills in her possession. She left my place on June 21st for a trip to Canada and I gave her the bills before she started. They were all signed by me. I wrote Mr. Raines' name on them. Don't believe I told her about those bills. I cautioned her not to spend too much. Thornhill apparently knew Mrs. Saucier was living with me and said the told him she got them from me. When the authorities questioned me I told them I could explain all right where they came from. They asked me a lot of questions about money so I said I understood between good money and the bad.

"I gave the officials no satisfaction about the money and requested to have a lawyer come and see me. Dennis O'Connor, Manchester, N.H., came to see me. Thornhill came to see me again and asked me if I had any objections to go to Canada, and I said I would not go unless they gave me papers to draw me out. My lawyer told me what there was against me and what to do, and that if I wanted to cheat Healy's room and made a statement it would go in my favor. I knew I would get ten or fifteen years for the job. It came to my mind that in all the other jobs I came out the worst, and that I would tell what I knew this time and so look out for myself and not let some other tell it on me. The fall before I saw a few paragraphs in a paper saying that Paré was arrested on a suspicion of having done the job. As I was coming to Canada about the time I bought a ticket for Detroit, at Kingston I heard that that was the last day of the trial and I stopped off and was just in time for the celebration, and I proceeded on my way on the same train that carried Paré, his mother and his cousin to Belleville."

Witness was taken back over his trip from Belleville to Montreal and was not able to say in the narrative. He stated that Road knew him for a cook and that he knew Road to be the same, and they knew each other's faces. He explained that the only successful way he knew of working a combination was to bore a hole through and then pick the lock. He had worked them otherwise, but either had the combination given him or learned it in some way. Paré seems great on details, for when Porter asked him how they took in the bank he told Napanée the story: "We looked some, went for a while, slept some and out some. That was about all we had to do."

It was when he was around the woods here that Mackie came on the scene. Road brought him down and a sort of a formal introduction such as "We have a new man on town" was used to introduce him to Mackie. The hold-up scheme was discussed, but that was not his forte.

MAY REMEDY THE DANGER.

CONSIDERING THE QUESTION OF A SUBWAY.

The Dangerous Level Crossing on Montreal Street Over the Grand Trunk Railway Company's Tracks Likely To Be Remedied—Engineers To Prepare Plans and Estimate.

For a great many years complaints have been made concerning the dangerous level crossing on Montreal street over the Grand Trunk tracks. Year in and out this perilous spot has been tolerated, but little or no attempt was ever made to have it remedied. Accidents have been frequent and many persons preferred going out of the way, and around by Barrieffield, to crossing this string of tracks. A great many trains pass the spot during the twenty-four hours each day, and as traffic over the street is equally great, that thoroughfare being one of the most important and most frequented of the many leading in and out of the city, an idea may be formed of the extreme danger of the spot. Many a farmer proceeding to market with a load of produce has had it scattered along the roadway, his rig broken and himself bruised through his horses taking fright and running away while going over the railway crossing. Frequently after a serious accident has taken place over the Grand Trunk railway company has been reminded by petition of the necessity of placing gates across the road on either side of the five tracks and keeping back vehicles while the trains were passing. But these petitions were not heeded and the danger continued to exist. Finally it was suggested that if a subway was constructed beneath the tracks the source of danger would be removed. The company took heed of this suggestion but failed to act because not pressed to do so by the proper authorities. Advantage was taken Tuesday of the presence in the city of superintendent of works Ezart, of the Grand Trunk company to draw to his attention the imperative need of providing protection to the traveling public using Montreal street, and consequently crossing the Grand Trunk tracks. He admitted that the spot was a dangerous one and ought to be protected. The subway scheme was unfolded to him with all its details and the system inasmuch as after construction the cost of maintenance would be practically nothing, whereas with gates there would be constant repairs and the expense of a keeper to operate them. Two subway schemes were outlined. One provided for the cutting of a subway beneath the tracks at the present location of the roadway. This is the preferable plan, as the line of street would remain unbroken and it would be unnecessary to purchase any land. However, as the excavating might be greater, as the subway of necessity must be deeper at this point than at a point lower down where plan No. 2 calls for a subway, on account of the road being on a level with the rails. In the matter of plan No. 2 it is proposed to run a fence over the road where the crossing is now made, and carry the south side of Montreal street in an easterly direction, parallel with the tracks, to a point about fifty yards east of the present crossing, where the tracks are elevated about eight or ten feet above the ground level. For this purpose a portion of an unused county road could be utilized. However, it would also necessitate the purchase of an outlet on the north side, from the tracks to the roadway. The cost of this would be a mere trifle compared with the benefits to be derived and the safety assured residents of both the county and the city. A portion of the land desired is owned by the Grand Trunk company and may be secured most reasonably. As to the cost of the proposed subway. By the scheme proposed this would be divided between three corporations—the city, the county and the Grand Trunk railway company. The city would construct the approach on the city side; the Grand Trunk railway company would be responsible for that portion of the subway immediately beneath the tracks, while the county would provide for the rest of the approach on the north side, or that portion which would be within the county limits. This would equalize the cost and make it comparatively light upon all three corporations concerned. The expense would be incurred in excavating, macadamizing and building stone retaining walls on either side. The electric light about to be erected at the present crossing would be sufficient to illuminate the subway after dark. If the three bodies take joint action there is no doubt the project of proposed crossing will be remedied as proposed. Mr. Ezart approved of the scheme and promised to send up from Montreal next week a civil engineer to consult with city engineer Bolger and county engineer Smith as to the suitability of one or either of the plans, and to prepare a draught of both and an estimate of the probable cost. No doubt plan No. 2 will be shown to be the cheaper, but if it is not considered below its estimate of plan No. 1 it would be advisable to adopt the last mentioned for many reasons.

MAKING NEW MATTRESSES. A Saving Effected The Militia Department at The Kingston Stores. Ever since the Royal military college has been established and a gymnasium connected therewith, the huge floor mattresses used in the gymnasium have been procured from regular dealers in sporting goods. As these mattresses have had to be replaced every few years, and as they cost a fancy price, the expense has been small figure and totals up a round sum. This expense will be saved the department in the future, as mattresses of a superior quality will be manufactured at the military stores, Barrieffield, by James Jacquith, an expert sailmaker and canvas worker employed in the stores. So far four new mattresses have been made for the college gymnasium and one or two more will be turned out. They are of a new design, composed of heavier duck and so constructed that they will prove far more durable than those of the old style, and will be much easier handled. The workmanship cannot be surpassed. In a few years, also, rubber blankets returned to stores damaged were condemned and replaced by new ones. Now Mr. Jacquith repairs those damaged, extending their usefulness for a period of from three to five years. Children's Shoes. We got a lot cheap and cheaply you may have them.
