BIG CONSUMPTION OF MEDICAL

PELLETS. The British Appetite For Medicine-A Big Revenue Derived From the Manufacturo-Over Six Hundred Tons of a Mix-

The British appetite for pills can only be gauged from the revenue receipts relating to the stamp duties paid for patent medi nes-which last year in the aggregate amounted to almost £250,000-and by making allowances for the pills dispensed by doctors and chemists, which are not dutiable.

An allowance of a trifle over half an ounce of pills for each inhabitant of the United Kingdom for the year cannot be said to be an extravagant estimate. Indeed such an allowance means but 32 doses a year, or 11/2 pounds of pills to last a lifetime of 60 years.

Placed in a straight line the pills of a lifetime would extend through some 40 feet, and there would be some 1,920 of them. The latter figure may seem rather large, but if 60 years of pills were combined into one sphere it would have a diameter of less than four inches and a circumference of under one foot.

It is not until we make calculations regarding the pill as a national delicacy that we arrive at any figures of magnitude, and then we find that something like 1,280,000 pills are swallowed annually. If these British pills were put in a straight line, they would extend from

The placing of the pills in a lengthy line of 5,050 miles would afford occupation for a pair of idle hands during 81 years, at the end of which time the owner of the hands would probably find the task of laying down three pills every second during an eight hours' day somewhat monotonous. If, in place of putting them into an extended line, we placed the pills in rows of 1,085 pills, and having arranged the same number of rows as there were pills in a row as a base, we could use Toronto, $1, return, $7.50; Montreal, $100, re- the rest of the pills in making 1,083 sim-turn, $7.50. Japanese Imitation.

The Japanese are almost universally condemned by writers for the initiation practiced by them of late years of western literature, art, science and invention, and yet this imitation seems natural and right. Imagine, if possible, the nation of Japan ! leaping across the civilization of hundreds of years in half a contury! Think of her emerging from the darkness of the middle ages and standing suddenly forth in the Light of the nineteenth century! Would it not have been worse than madness for her to have said: "This new civilization is better than ours, yet we will not initiate ! it? We will retain our originality and I perhaps in ages to come we shall reach the enlightened state now enjoyed by the rest

But fortunately the Japanese did not say this, but gave themselves up to the

PUTTING HIM RIGHT.

The Small Boy Thought the Orator Wanted Informatiqua.

They were having a flag raising in a township not more than thalf an hour's run from Detroit, and an orator from this city went out to make the cagle scream for the assembled patriots. To the more youthful members it was the event of a lifetime, and their olders were scarcely less enthusiastic. There had been days of anxious waiting and preparation, the com mittee in charge were as busy as the whippers in at a political convention and the women, always the most ferrent of patriotic citizens, had prepared a generous spread to be enjoyed after the more formal

When the orator mounted the rostrum. he confronted a motley assemblage, and his lips twitched with a desire to smile as he noted a little fellow on a front seat, his feet bare, his red hair bristling, his eves sparkling and his one suspender, over which there was neither cont nor vest. fastened with a wooden pin. It was plain that to him the proceedings were no less important than those by which congress had decreed the liberation of Cuba.

"Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen." began the speaker, "what are we here for?" The urchin on the front seat wriggled as though in pain, his face took on an angry look, indignation overcame bashfulness as he shouted in a high key, "To hoise the flag, you dernod jay!"

The orator joined in the inevitable laugh, restrained a zealous citizen that was going to lead the small boy out by in Westminster Abbey as bishop of Bom. the car, and from that time on confined bay. foungster liked to have unjointed himself In bis enthusiastic applause. - Detroit Free
