with bona fide Spanish cooking, something seldom seen in this country. Oil and pepper are the two things that especially characterize the Castilian cuisine. One of the favorite dishes in Cuba is "tasajo," which is simply dried meat cooked with tomatoes, red peppers, and onions. "Tripa a la Andaluza" is another preparation frequently seen. As the name indicates, the basis is boiled tripe, which is cooked with beans and potatoes, and always served with the small red Spanish sausage, known as "butafarra Catalina." A similar saus age, only black, is known as "butafarra Astaiana." "Chile con carne," which everybody eats, is nothing more than a thick stew of beef (carne) and beans seasoned with chiles. Spanish "tortillas" are corn cakes flavored with, red peppers, and differ from the Mexicon fortilla in that the latter, when properly made, are rolled in chopped vege tables. A salad, a la Espanola, is prepared of lettuce and celery, with a few sliced tomatoes and peppers. Serven with French dressing it is very good. The Spanish soups are as a rule a little too heavy for the American taste, which runs more toward the consomme. They are thick decoctions, full of vege tables, and look frightfully greasy. Soun, however, does not have the important role among the Spaniards that it plays in French domestic economy and is an article of secondary import

She Practiced in Athens Disguised as a The first qualified woman physician in Europe, so far as is known, was a young Athenian woman named Akno dice, says the Medical Journal. In the year 200 B.C. she disguised herself as man and began to attend the medical schools at Athens, which it was against he law for a woman to do. She afterward practiced among the women of Athens with extraordinary success. But her secret becoming known, she was prosecuted for studying and practicing medicine illegalty. The Athenian women, however, raised so furious an agitation in consequence that the case was dropped and the law repealed. Coming to later times, we find several women who obtained the degree of doctor of medicine, and practiced Europe before 1392, especially in the Moorish universities of Spain, Trotula of Rugiero, in the eleventh century had a European reputation, and practiced as a doctor in Salerno. At the beginning of the fourteenth century Dorothea Boechi not only received the degree of doctor, but was professor of medicine in the famous university of Bologna. Since then two other womer have been professor of medical subjects in the same university - Anna Mangolini (anatomy) and Dr. Maria delle Donne tobstetric medicine), the latter being appointed in 1739. In the year 1311 an edict was issued in France forbidding surgeons and female surgeons from practicing until they had passed a satisfactory examenation before the proper authorities. These female surgeons are again referred to in an edict in 1352.

BURNT WOOD AS AN ORNAMENT.

It Is Very Easy to Acquire the Enack of the Art Useful. "The decoration of wood by the application of heated from is an art of long standing," says Florence Fetherston in the Ladies' Home Journal, "and many interesting examples of old work are occasionally to be found. For a trifling sum a complete apparatus may be bought, which includes a platinum point that is kept heated white the work is in progress, not by electricity, as many suppose, but by fumes of benzine, which is supplied by pressure on a rubber bellows which is connected by tubing to a bottle half filled with benzine. When beginning the work, the point should not be heated in any flame but that of an alcohol lamp Any other flame would be liable to smoke and ruin the point. In burning outlines The little brain with fairy fanctes remember that to make a broad, firm line it is not necessary to press. The lines are to be scorched, not incised. The point is held and guitied much in the same manner as a drawing pencil, but some little practice is needed to enable the worker to pass it smoothly and readily over the wood, the tendency of all beginners being to allow it to rost and make dots. No discouragement, however, must be telt at this, as with a little practice the manipulation will become easy, and the worker be able to make dark or light strokes at
