IN SPHERE OF USEFULNESS.

Victorian Nurses At Work In The Elon-In a private letter Col. Evans, commander of the Yukon force, says to the countess of Aberdeen:

FORT SELKIRK, Sept. 1.—On Tuesday I returned from Dawson City after a two and a half days's trip-180 miles-against the powerful current of the Yukon. was greated with the dismal information that the Anglian, en route to Teslin Lake to bring down the remainder of my force, had been wrecked on the Hostelinqua, whose waters are now too low to permit of steamboat navigation. The force, including nurses Hanna and Payson and Miss Fenton, will thus be compelled to travel 400 miles in scows.

I saw Miss Powell at Dawson. She decided to remain there as soon as she visited the piace and found how great was the need. She would have liked to have nurse Scott with her, but the latter could not be spared from Fort Selkirk. I hope the other nurses may arrive before long.

Miss Powell is in full charge of the Good Samaritan hospital, Presbyterian, and is worked off her feet. This hospital, although not yet completed, is over filled with patients, nearly all typhoid cases. The hospital consists of two log buildings about twenty-six feet long by fifty feet, one storey, and is built on a bog ill-drained and difficult to drain. She herself lives in a small tent and as it freezes now every night it is poor quarters for her after her day of severe and trying work. I hope they will have a cabin built before the other nurses arrive, but the hospital is rather bard up.

To see and be in Dawson is to realize that house to house or tent to tent nureing is out of the question and but for the hospital authorities I cannot imagine where the nurses would find a home. It costs a great deal to build a cabin. Logs are worth $10 each and wages run from $10 to $15 per day. The police barracks are very small, poor shanties, and are not large the modern mills are running on full time. | enough for the detachmens there.

Dawson is the sight of a lifetime, be built chiefly on a low, boggy flat and partly on the sides and nearly up to the top of high mountain. The main street is along the river front and is very duely, with an occasional mud hole. It is lined with shops, storehouses, and last but not least, salcone, hotels and gambling houses. Tueusands of idle men seem to walk this street day and night. The street behind the main street is nearly up to one's knees in mud and the mud and swamp becomes deeper until the foot of the mountain is reached. The eight at night would more than astonish the staid Canadians of the

It is an impressive sight coming in on the boat, this city of tents and cabins covering the long stretch of bog and five and climbing up the mountain side. Typhoid prevails in the town and a worse spidemic may break out as the smells are awful. Wages are very high, but there are thousands of idie men who have food and are not particular whether they work or

I got a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters and it did me so much good that I used 5 bottles more and am now entirely well." LUCRETIA HADLEY, Bury's Green, Ont.
