The Snow Flakes.

Sing little snowflakes
In the air so high,
Are you little angels
Floating in the sky?
Robed so white and spotless,
Flying like a dove,
Are you little creatures
From the world above?

Whirling on the sidewalks,
Dancing on the street;
Kissing all the faces
Of the children sweet;
Loading all the housetops,
Powdering all the trees;
Pretty little snowflakes,
Winter's busy bees.

Winter is Coming

"Winter is coming, Ho! Ho! Ho! Ho! Winter is coming with ice and snow." for our little flower friends. How busying at present. Judging from the number of snowflakes he sent us the other day. He is kind and thought ful, I think, in sending down such a beautiful white quilt for our little flower friends. How busy the snowflakes will need to be to tuck every tiny seed and plant safely from the cold north wind.

All the lively summer friends are endeavoring to get new and snug quarters for the winter. Our friends "Pigs and Hens," the bees, the caterpillars, the wasps, robins, catabies and grasshoppers have gone to their winter homes. The grubs are taking their shelter behind the bark of the trees. Mr. Woodpecker has found that our apple is some juicier "fruit hunting" for him. You may see him any day. Sunday and Monday are also seen.

But let us look at the children. How do they like the coming of winter? He knows best.

"Hurrah for! girls say, while oh! Well boys like it, too, oh! Yet I do not think the boys enjoy it some what better than the girls, still both girls and boys are glad. Oh! a way they can other morning I am just a little sure though I am "up" early.

Have you ever seen a boy with a new pair of skates? Oh! such a "Yes" but still I think I will tell you what a boy I know who has a new pair of skates with the straps. He was a little boy about six years old. Some boys a pair of skates and he was very much pleased
