HOMES OF THE POOR.

In discussing the problem of the "Dabbate Poor," the representative of Kingston said, at the recent convention in Toronto: "It is little wonder that men sometimes take to drink, considering the state of the homes they live in, and their cheerless and hapless lives. Prohibition would close the bar rooms, but would not remove the causes, and would, therefore, be only a negative benefit. Sympathy and love in our charity are needed, and also more public baths."

This suggests that Canada's need, in the towns and cities, is such organizations as England now possesses, and for the good and welfare of its poor. The idea is not to dole out a little charity to the indigent, sometimes in a public way, but to make the poor feel that the Christian spirit is a helpful one and that it inspires to works noble and effective service.

The poor, the very poor, have little opportunity to study housekeeping on an elevated plan. They have not access to the places where comfort reigns. They do not see how the thrift of the housewife can transform the house, and they appreciate, and even desire, the education that is carried to them.

In England the poor districts are visited by kind hearted women, who, acting under the direction of the local society, talk with the people, establish their friendship, and then, judiciously, show or teach them that tidiness that makes the home attractive. Moreover these visitors supervise the mending of clothes, the purchase and cooking of foods, and the house work generally. I confess and economy are enforced and exercised.

This may be a hard service, involving humiliation sometimes, but it is in the spirit of the Master, whose it was to go about continually doing good.

PROTEST TALKED OF.

By the Lennox election is to be protest ed. At least advice has been offered freely in that direction by the conservative press, and it will, of course, be acted upon. It is pointed out that Mr. Aylsworth resigned the seat once in order to avoid an exposure of the methods by which he had gained it. There is an assumption that he was afraid to let the case go to trial. Was he? Then why did the conservatives, the men who know so much, take so kindly to his proposition, and agree to his resigna tion?

Those best able to judge of the situation did not see the advantage of going on with an exposure to which they might have had to contribute their share. Mr. Aylsworth simply admitted that he had learned of that which, if brought out in a trial, might invalidate the election, and he resolved that through an election court is not the most economical way of reaching a conclusion. His wife to give up the seat did not carry with it the implication that his majority was a purchased one; it was the outcome of his desire to avoid a useless expenditure of money in court proceedings, and to no purpose. Yet he will not get credit for this, though a succeeding election gave him a larger majority and a warmer and more cordial endorsement at the polls.

In Kingston once, the seat was vacated by the admission that there was no infringement of the election law. This was interpreted to mean that the majority, all of it was procured corruptly. The liberal candidate was again elected. A year and later, his election was protested, and the case went to trial, with the result that it was dismissed. That trial was the best thing that could have happened. It put an end to the many speculations of the press. It removed forever the impression that the liberals were afraid to meet their accusers. It demonstrated how these men worked up their grievances. It proved that the "removal of corruption," of which they talked, was a figment of the imagination.

Elsewhere there is another election protest it should go to trial. Then the conservatives will have a chance of showing what they know, and, not knowing much, as in Kingston, will have a chance to pay for their lies, and folly.

A FINE EXHIBIT.

A great many people, the very best in the community, have advanced religious instruction in the public schools. I am convinced that religion has an improving tendency, and brings not only a greater reverence for sacred things, but a regard for morally and honorable character. That these exhibitions are the super-exhibitions of the rising generation — we family and socially-minded, must be evident from the conduct of the students of Queen's college. If there is one institution more than another on the continent, based upon religious instruction, controlled by priests, and maintained at this, it is this University; yet we find that even in the loosely-governed sporting circles of Ontario, where the big towns crush the smaller places from their force of numbers and without regard to the honor of the sport, a college team reaches the lowest depth. When the first game between Queen's college and Guelph was won easily through the partiality of referee McDougall, even sporting circles made an acknowledgment of disgrace. Now McDougall is a graduate of the religious institution at Ottawa, and must be considered a fair sample of its products.

On Saturday again, although the Queen's ## offered to accept several men of fair repute as referees, Ottawa college put up several names of men that either could not be produced or were impossible of acceptance and then Mr. McDougall appears as the only man available out of their choice; the only man conspired with Ottawa college and McDougall accepts the position, knowing that every man of the Granite team objected to him, and would feel that they were starting out to probable defeat, no matter how well they played. How any person would consent a second time to judge when he was objected to, because of his proceedings on the first occasion, and so seriously objected to that men would not remain on the field with him, is a puzzle to all who feel there is some good in everything. These religious young men who projected McDougall into the position were not even amenable to the recommendations of their own professors, who desired them to consent to a fair game. They wanted the game plugged in their favor before it started. This is a fine product indeed of a religious institution. It is about time Ottawa college became a secular institution and taught manliness as a distinct study and let Christianity alone, since it is a decided failure in that quarter.

Football contests have shown that Canadian sportsmen are ungenerous. In some respects the football unions are not creditable, and when Toronto and Montreal newspapers allow representatives of this union to use their columns for partisan talk and action they bring the sport very near to degradation. It would be better for the credit of young men and the permanency of sport if football were dropped for five years. It is a great pity it cannot be disqualifed as corrupt voters are.

MONDAY MEDITATIONS.

There is not much sense in making every English general in the army, who makes his mark, member of the house of lords. The appointment gives him a title. Ode to that and nothing more. He is entitled to all the honors his country can give him in a military capacity, but he cannot be made a legislator by act of parliament. Lord Leinster may cast the lords, in memory of his father, but in the upper chamber he will never amount to much. Politics is not to his taste.

Judges generally, are pretty smart men, but they are not all sages, not all possessed of a purely angelic nature. On reading their speeches occasionally one is led to infer that they are shocked by the awful in families with which they have to deal. The talk of one of them on the election cases the other day, suggested that he saw something wrong in the settlement of them. But he admitted that he had only to do with what was laid before him. He was not looking up the evidence or he would probably have less to say about it.

The Crescents Won.

The Gananoque football team met a decisive defeat on Queen's campus on Saturday afternoon, when the Crescents rolled up a score of twenty-one without giving the visitors a score. The game was anything but a good exhibition of rugby. A slippery field prevented anything but a scrum-game. The home team used their higher opponents roughly, and at times several of the players lost their heads. The game was referred to "Crescent" Robinson with A. Graves as captain, and the team lined up as follows:

Crescents—Backs: Moore, Hayes, McArthur, O'Connor, Barlett, quarter, First Year, remnants, Johnston, Hayes, Davitt, wings, Eddie Patterson (captain), Wright, Shemmon, Kerr.

Crescents—Backs: Smith, Hayes, Lived, Curtis, Roberts, Ross, Barker, wings, Mc Donald, Ross, Wilson, Cullingham, Thornton, Dawson.

Reporting Notes.

Ragopolis plays the high school team of Gananoque on Thanksgiving day on the latter's ground.

The athletic committee of Queen's resented the compensation to the alms master to set on Saturday night, on account of the lack of confidence expressed by the students in its action in the recent foot ball troubles. The compensation was accepted, and the same committee re-enacted, but each member declined to act.

A new committee will be appointed next Saturday night, and one not so capable of managing the affairs of the university as the two committees.

Report of the Board.

A Toronto shooting party, just returned from the north, is reported in favor of the government, regarding the order which prohibits the shooting of deer in the water. They found numbers of dead deer in the bush which no one could follow, but take out, while in the water their bodies would be recoverable. It also struck them that the natives are killing the deer indiscriminately. In several places they found that hogs were not shooting, but deer flesh. The truth is, the deer have more to fear from the hogs than from the exactions of amateur hunters. The game warden should secure a few come mons.

Report from the Queen's.

The majority reported on Friday by Dr. E. Aylsworth, in Ottawa, was the largest that had ever received in that city. There have been twelve provincial elections since confederation. Of these the conservatives have carried seven or the Liberals five. In 1897 the conservatives won by 28%, in 1892 by 53%. After that the Conservatives were more even, and each party carried the elections. The conservatives being stronger, won twice more to 17% than by majorities of less than 20%, three times, and in March, 1898, chose the former.

METEOR FALLS DURING SHOWER OF TUESDAY.

It Hurts Millions The French Bark Quailily.

The Officers an Astounding Disaster.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 21.—It is a strange story told by Capt. Garret, of the French bark quailily, which arrived at Marcus Hook yesterday in ballast from Rouen, France. Capt. Garret is one of the most experienced navigators who visit this port, and his vessel is a superb example of the shipbuilder's art. His remarkable story attracted much attention in marine and shipping circles.

Capt. Garret says that on the night of November 15th a huge meteor flashed out of the heavens and fell with a tremendous splash directly in the path of this vessel, throwing water high in the air and drenching every man who was on the deck of the bark.

The entry in the captain's logbook states that when forty miles east of Cape Henlopen his attention was called to a brilliant display of lights which had just begun. Those of his crew who had turned in were summoned to the deck, and all eagerly watched the brilliant heavenly pyrotechnics. Suddenly an intolerable brilliancy began to permeate the starry heavens, and suddenly a tremendous meteor shot from directly in the path of the speeding craft.

The unexpected advent of the great body evoked consternation among the crew. Blinded by the fierce white glare, which surpassed the sun at midday, they fled fainting with terror to the deck.

The progress of the meteor was closely watched by Capt. Garret. It appeared to emanate from the star Beta, in the constellation Leo, and, so far as he could gauge, its size was apparently of the dimensions of the forward deck house, and it must have weighed twenty tons. Its speed was incomparably rapid, scarcely ten seconds being required for it to flash into view and bury itself in the sea, and overwhelming the bark in its descent with water.

The crew, blinded by the terrible upheaval, frantically struggled for places of safety under boats and in the cabins, deserting their posts to a man. Even the steersman left the wheel.

It was some time before quiet could be restored. It was found that the enormous mass of white hot metal had caused the iron cables to rise from 34 to 55 by Fahrenheit thermometer on the deck. Incoming skippers say that the quailily attracted much attention down the river with one side blistered as though the bark had been through fire.

Between the two stopped, held by conflicting opinions.

It was a terrible moment for Bobson.

III.

Mr. Bobson walked the streets in a deep brown study and wet blue socks, for it was raining, as usual, in Alexandria.

"If I go home with the turkey, Mrs. B. will raise a rumpus because I didn't buy the apron, and if I go home with the apron she will raise a rumpus because I didn't buy the turkey," he cogitated.

He took out his 60 cents. He counted them. They were 60. They looked like 60. They felt like 60. So did he.

"Without a turkey there will be no Thanksgiving dinner," he finally said and started resolutely for the market.

Then he stopped.

"Without an apron there will be no Thanksgiving dinner," he said and set off de terminately for the notions store.

Between the two he stopped, held by conflicting opinions.

It was a terrible moment for Bobson.

IV.

As we go to press Bobson is still standing in the middle of the street, unable to decide which should be chosen for dinner.

Between the two he stopped, held by conflicting opinions.

It was a terrible moment for Bobson.
