SNAKES AS DECOFATIONS.

Samoan Dancing Girls Wreathe Themselves With Reptiles.

For the most part the Pacific Islands are destitute of snakes. That is absolutely the case in Hawaii. In New Zealand, equally free of these reptiles, the only knowledge which the Maoris had of snakes may be found in a legend of a monster called the staniwha, concerning which authorities differ as to whether it is the ancestral and dim recollection of a snake or of an alligator. All the eastern islands of Polynesia between these two outposts are snakeless.

Samoa seems to lie just on the boundary line of snakes in the Pacific. In the eastern islands of the archipelago no snakes are to be found; in Upolu a few are seen at rare intervals; in Savaii, only a few miles to the westward, they are common and attain great size, in the case of some kinds at least. None of them is venomous, and the islanders neither fear them nor exhibit any of that repugnance to their presence which is commonly called

This indifference to the reptiles is made mest markedly manifest at the hamlet of Iva. on the northeast coast of Savail. Here are to be found small snakes of a most brilliant red color. They are so common that a basketful may be easily picked up in any hanana patch. The dancing girls of this town are in the habit of employing these gaudy snakes for personal adornment in their dances. They tie them about their necks, their ankles and their wrists, festoon them in their headdresses and tuck a few extra ones in the belt in readiness to replace such as escape in the dance. At their best these sivas danced by the Samoans are either dull or revolting shows of savagery. It can easily be imagriced that they are made no more attragtive when the taupou or village maid and her crew of attendant girls go careering about with an assertment of writhing red snakes. Still the Samoans, who have no stock of snake projudices, look upon this as one of the most successful and artistic din as in their islands.—San Francisco Examiner

Jurors and Juries.

That the general grade of jurors, espefeally in our large cities, can be raised to the ideal standard, there can be no doubt, and generally the existing statutes are ample.
