EARL ABERDEEN'S SPEECH

In response to the toast of the earl and countess of Aberdeen at the ban quet la laverpool, tendered on their arrival, his lordship said: There was all appropriateness in meeting, their first greeting in that great City, because in no other part of ireat Britain were the affairs of Can ida watched with greater interest than in Liverpool. He was rather bleased by an expression used in a geo graphical description by a gentleman was a great relief from pain. A very large the other day in alluding to a certain portion of the continent of America. He said "it is bounded on the east by the waters which connect England and America." That, no doubt, was the only connection, and the more they made use of it the better, and the more they increased the facilities. so much was it to the advantage of both countries. (Hear, hear.) His difficility in speaking of Canada was that he might dilate unduly upon the subject. Lady Aberdeen and himself Wolfe Island, Dec. 21. - The nomina | would always remember with grati tude the manner in which they had wen treated in Canada. They did not expect, they were not prepared for would be fully occupied, not withstand ing that he was not called u on to bettern executive ac.'s. But there were many interests and many move manner in which his successor the garl of Minto, would enter upon his uties. The Canadians were also re narkable in that they were character. zed by an intense spirit of confidence n their own country, and in its fuure, and that had been manfiested ! within the period which his experience overed. About five years ago a cerain tariff legislation was passed by a neighboting republic, which had the effect of catting off certain channels of trade. Was there any doubt, anxiety. or despondency on the part of the anadian people! None, (Hear, and determination that if one market was closed they would find another, and they looked in the direction of Great Britain (hear, hear), and so showed their mettle on that occasion, and the tendency to increase commerce with Great Britain took very deflaite drage when the dominion parliament legided to provide for certain facilitie or trade, which seemed to be fully appreciated in this country. He thought that was in the minds of the British public to some extent when, the diamond jubilee, the Canadian re presentative was received with an exceptional amount of fervor and atten tion, (Cheers.) The Canadians- he called himself a Canadian — were very proud that Canada was so well refre sented in the person of Sir Wilfrid 21th inst, is being looked forward to with Laurier, the premier. Quite apart from any party view. Canada as a whole felt she was well represented and was proud of the marks of honor ittention, and distinction conterred apon Sir Wilfrid Laurier, first by her majesty the queen, and also by the her sister, Mrs. D. McDonald .- J. F. San- British public generally. They over here had had an opportunity of sec.bg and learing what manner of man Si Wilfrid Laurier was, and he thought Canada had no need to be ashamed et her premier, (Cheers.) The Cana dians had shown their mettle. While Canada might justly be very proud of the magnitude of her territory, what the would have to do was to see that it was developed in every sense, "not only commercially, but socially, in the matter of government, and in every way worthy of a great dependency, (Cheers.) He would like to allude to what was necessarily of great importance as a factor in Canadian affairs the proximity of the United States He was sure they must all rejoice in seeing that the movement towards understanding and friendship between Great Britain and the United States had been fully shared by Canada in her attitude towards the United States (Cheecs.) Of course, where reord were neighbors they did sometimes have differences - it was usually the two neighboring farmers who did not agree - but the feeling between Canada and the United States was now of the most friendly and pleasant character, (Hear, hear,) He was sure they welcomed all indications of the uniting, not only of Canada and Great Britain, but of the Anglo Saxor race generally, (Chects.) They would welcome whatever belied it. (Hear, hear,) They had so much in common at heart, even in incidental things, such as the air of their nation al anthems, that the union of inter ests was taking a practical shape and a visible sign in regard to the commission which had been appointed and which was now sitting. The commission, quite apart from whatever results might accrac, might be regarded from its mere constitution and appointment as marking an epoch in a steady growth of good feeling and friendship. (Hear, hear.) The form tion of that commission illustrated the close communication between the mother country and Canada, as wellas indicating the friendly relations with the United States. The constitotion of the commission was significant, especially in the manner in which the Canadian contingent was appointed, which fermed a precedent and a distinct step in a process and system. The lord mayor had alluded to the attitude and position of the French community in Canada, No. doubt the difference of race existhiz in Canada might be a source of difficulty, but, as the late lamented Sir John Thompson, a splendid man and former premier of Canada, remarked to him on one occasion, that was a diminishing quantity, (Cheers,) He often told his French-Canadian friends that the British people were proud of their position and their attitude, but it was a source of pride and satisfaction in the best sense. They were proud that the French Canadians had the good sense and good feeling to be so thoroughly loyal to Great Britain, and they of the mother country were proud that they or their ancestors did the right thing in securing to French-Canadians their institutions in law, religion and language. (Cheers.) He could assure them that the French Canadians to-day were of the same mind, and showed it in their attitude of loyalty, trust and confidence. (Cheers.) They must not lay too much stress upon an occasional passing expression at a
