The Zone of Fire in Cuba. It can be truthfully said of the whole province of Matanzas that it resembles nothing so much as a great ash heap, and the same is true of the three other western provinces. But there was a radius of five miles around the city of Matanzas that had not been destroyed in January, This has been pointed out as the zone of cultivation, where some day, some remote manana, the land would be allotted to the pacificos and seed be given them to plant. But finally more cruel counsel prevailed, and in March the destruction of all this property and even the growing crops was decree by General Molinas, the military governor. The last time I stood on the summit of Montserrat there were three great fires burning to the right and to the left of me and before me. Everything was on fire except the sea, which cannot be made to burn, even by royal decree.
