Welcome. I was riding along a country road in the vicinity of Memphis when I came a newly painted frame house which gave such shining evidence of prosperity that it was an attraction to the barren landscape about it. A long, lean man, stoopshouldered and ungainly, sat on a post in front of the spick-and-span doorstep, and held an old rifle across his knees, at the same time that he peered from under his shaggy brows in all directions, as if he were in ambush and expected to be
