Everybody in the courtroom was surranged for, and it was a serious question with the reception committee whether or not anything but hanging would suit the tastes of the expected guests. Especially was James B. Hartwenter, the sheriff, disturbed by Gridley's decision. Hartwenter was a humane man, and he had been putting in several days of practicing a crew of marksmen and a gang of scuffold experts with the view of making Gridley's exit as comfortable and expeditious as possible when it came to the day of the passing out. Hartwenter himself bad no liking for the business of methodically killing men by programme, but he felt that with a lot o. unknown riflemen aiming at a culprit's heart there could be no after remorse, because nobody would over know whose bullet had killed, and to some extent the same conditions prevailed in a hanging where the cord was out by a man unknown to those present. But a decepitation! There was no fashion of concealing identity in such a case -- no comfortable way of believ ing that nobody knew just who had done the killing. And as he, the sheriff, was be official directed to perform on the slaughtering day, he felt intensely worried.

He went to Gridley in his coll. "Look here," he said. "What kind of a fool notion is this of yourn? Don't you know you'll spile your clothes an walk around in a disgustin way analogous to a chicken killed for dinner? The case of Denmark is in point. Denmark's trade in eggs with foreign countries, chiefly with England and Scotland, has grown enormously. Twenty years ago the annua Danish export of eggs was 600,000; now it is reckoned at 110,000,000. In the same period the importation of eggs into England has increased tenfold, but only a part the two other egg exporting countries being Holland and France. France ex-
