Will Staff-Sergt. Long Be Decorated For

Arrangements are in progress to presens Staff Sergt. Long, "A" field battery, R.C.A., with the medal of the Royal humane society of Great Britain, for his gallant action in saving a youth named Dalton from death by drowning last epring. The presentation will be made in the presence of the three regiments in camp on Barriefield commons and will take place on the camp ground.

It will be remembered that the WHIG exclusively took up Staff Sergt. Long's market excursion. cause, and had the necessary petition presented to the city council, and application made to the society. A Quiet Wedding.

Rev. J. K. McMorine was called upon last evening to twice perform the beautiful marriage ceremony of the church of England. In the second instance the contracting parties were Mrs. Georgina A. Ball, daughter of James Reid, furniture dealer, Princess street, and William Bloomfield, captain of the steamer Mero. Mira Ethel Reid attended her sister, while W . Dawson supported the groom. The bride was attired in a travelling costume of a becoming color and looked charming has secured a good position in the office of heavy rain; eight firemen present. Arriving at the home of her parents after the ceremony, Mrs. Bloomfield was met by her father, mother, sisters and brothers, all assembled for the occasion. The wedding was of a quiet nature, the immediate relatives of the contracting parties only being present. Captain and Mrs Bloomfield left on a tour of New York state and will stop at New York city before returning. They will take up residence on Colborne street.

dence at Killarney and the Title of Prince of Ireland, May Succeed the Viceroy.

The scheme in detail is to create the Duke of York prince of Ireland and to have the title descend to the eldest son of each succeeding prince of Wales. The few loyal peers of Ireland and the Irish Tories of the south of Ireland would be greatly pleased, and it is probable that not a few patriotic Irishmen would find no great opposition to the plan.

Almost anything would be better than maintaining the viceregal farce which now holds the boards. Every effort has been made to invest the Irish viceroy with dignity, but somehow each added frill of pomp and circumstance has brought only increased ridicule. The viceroy has been given Dublin castle as a place of residence and a salary of $100,000 to keep it up. He has been surrounded with a mimic court, with the usual complement of state stewards, comptroller of the household, gentlemen in waiting, aids-de-camp, and the like. Since the position has been an expen sive one to fill, it has been the custom to select for it a peer with plenty of money. Whether he had brains or not was a secondary consideration. So it has happened that sometimes the queen's lord lieutenant in Ireland I been a man who has not reflected credit on the royal house. There was one vice oy who was drunk so much of the time that he was in disgrace even in convivial Ireland. The interesting feature of his failing was that whenever he became intoxicated he showed a desire to make use of his princely prerogative to knight folks. On one occasion he conferred this distinction on the "boots" of a country hotel, "boots" having given needed assistance in getting him to bed.

There has already been some foolish talk about the rossible danger to the future in a deserted cabin, and British rule in Ireland were "removed"

However, the establishment of a nominal Irish prince in Muckross house, Killarney, as is suggested, would be fully as acceptable an evidence of British authority as is the viceroyal residence in Dublin. With what social gayety the Duke and Duchess of York would bring to the Killarney region, not to mention the profit which would come from the entertainment of the train of nobility and tourists which would follow in their wake, it is probable that the Irish would be financial gainers by the change.
