THE WARD SYSTEM. The annual discussion of the ward system of appropriating and applying public moneys to public improvements has broken out. In London it has been in vogue, and it is declared by the News that "if all the antiquated relics of the past the ward appropriation system is the most stupid. Its abolition should be a plank in the platform of all aspirants for municipal honors. And what will some of these know about it? One needs to be a member of the council several years in order to discuss these subjects intelligently. The ward system is a poor and system to say the least of it. The assessment of the city is fixed, and the decision is not to change the rate. As a consequence the expenditure, very properly, is made to fit the revenue, and the paring down process begins, until, when the budget is prepared, one cannot identify the original plan of "actual necessities."
