POSTOFFICE KINKS. Disputed Points Call For Ruling Which the Public Seldom Sees.

In the administration of every postoffice there are bound to arise differences tween the authorities and the public which have to be referred to Washington for adjustment. There rules are made which will fit the grievances, but the public generally knows little about these minor regulations. They are promulgated, of course, "A Divorce Cure" at the opera house to: in the annual Postoffice Guide, but who ever reads that, except for the location of renting a postoffice box from which to get clandestine mail, but he can't prove it by the postoffice, for the employees are forbidden to tell the name of any person who rents a box or drawer. The Press has noted from time to time some of the odd and least understood of the newer rules, and it adds here some others from the latest monthly supplement of the Guide.

Soldiers, sailors and marines in the active service of the United States are the only persons in the country who can send their mail C. O. D. If their letters are marked "soldier's letter," "sailor's letter" or "marine's letter," as the case may be and under these words appears the signasure of the commanding officer, the postage, but at single rates only, will be collected on delivery.

It's queer, but if there is postage due on a letter the postmaster cannot lawfully accept postage stamps in payment. The only legal tender in such a case is money. It is possible that the New York postoffice authorities have overlooked that general rule for postmasters in the conduct of their offices which says: "It is important that mail matter be postmarked in a perfect manner so that each letter and figure of the stamp may be distinct. A failure on the part of the postmaster to postmark mail legibly not only reflects upon the management of his office, but renders him liable to be charged with delays which have not actually occurred at his office." Not only are postmasters forbidden to furnish lists of persons receiving mai from their postoffices, but the wives and families of the postmaster are also forbidden to tell what the head of the family may have mentioned. As to the members of his family, the enforcement of the prohibition is left with the postmaster. - New York Press.
