FRANZ FERDINAND'S MISALLIANCE

Archduke John's Love Marriage and Disappearance-Archduke Henry Marries a Singer-The Mystery of Archduke Rudolf's Unhappy Fate.

The news that Archduke Franz Ferdi nand of Austria, son of the late Archduke Karl Ludwig and Princess Annunciata, and heir presumptive to the throne of Austria-Hungary, has married beneath his station, while it will assuredly cause con-

ARCHDUKE FRANZ FERDINAND sternation in the great courts of Europe will hardly surprise those who know how rone the male members of the Austrian imperial house have been, at least during the present century, to enter into matri monial alliances of this kind. In this respect many of the Hapsburgs have won much unenviable notoriety. Love, indeed, has played a great part in the lives of many of them, bringing in too many instances ostracism and social ruin, and in one instance at least a lamentable and untimely death.

Never singularly fortunate, the Hapsburgs have of late years been singularly unfortunate. Study their history for the past few decades, and how many domestic casualties and eccentric acts will you find recorded!

Orly a few years ago Archduke John of Austria disappeared, and they say that the old emperor still mourns for him. A brilliant fellow he was, but wonderfully hot headed and independent. His teachers complained that he seemed to lack "a sense of reverence." He entered the army and at once inaugurated several sweeping reforms. The state authorities checked him, and then, in revenge, he published a bitter pamphlet, in which he inveighed florcely against the Austrian military authorities and claimed that the army was shamefulls mismanaged. The emperor punished him by sending him to Cracow, but he was soon back in Vienna, writing music, studying spiritualism and otherwise busying himself. The red tape of officialism he constantly defled, and at last, in September, 1887, the emperor deprived him of all his offices and forbade him to appear at court. In disgust the archduke left Vienna, and the world next heard that he had assumed the name of Johann Orth and had married Emilie Stubel, a pretty little Austrian singer. It was a love match, pure and simple. One day Emilie "met a handsome young man who said he was a student, and with whom she fell in love, because he loved her so tenderly; only she thought he dressed much too plainly. At a review of the in a uniform so fine that it almost took her breath away. She asked some one who he was, and was told that he was Archduke John of Austria." Johann Orth next became a captain, and soon afterward the world heard that he had lost his life at sea while sailing to Valparaiso from Buenos Ayres. Not very long ago, however, the rumor spread that he was still alive and had been seen fighting on the side of the Congressionalists in the Chilean war. Anyhow, there is no more typical example of a rebel Hapsburg than Johann Orth. A kindred soul is Archduke Henry, youngest son of the late Archduke Rainier, vicercy of Lombardy. He was a general in the army, and while stationed at Gratz he made the acquaintance of Fraulein Hofmann, a singer at the theater, with a monthly salary of 50 florins. She was by no means a great singer. Her last role was that of Pamela, in "Fra Diavolo," but she was pretty, quick witted, the very type of a Viennese girl, and, above all, irreproachable in her conduct and manners. The archduke paid court to her, and when he was obliged to take the field in Italy he promised that he would marry her if his life was spared, and this promise he faith-

The emperor stormed, fumed and did all in his power to reclaim the prodigal, but all his efforts were in vain. Archduke Henry had vowed to be true to Fraulein Hofmann, and not all the powers in Christendom could persuade him to abandon her. All Francis Joseph could do was to deprive the archduke of his military rank and expatriate him. The marriage took place on Feb. 4, 1868, and not until 1889 did the emperor show any signs of relenting. In the latter year he allowed the archduke to present his wife and daughter to him, and thus the family quarrel was Probably the most unfortunate Hapsburg of recent times was Archduke Rudolf Francis Charles Joseph. He was born Aug. 21, 1858, and was the eldest son of Franz Joseph, emperor of Austria. He was carefully educated and learned to speak ten languages and also became versed in zoology and the natural sciences. He was also a great traveler and hunter. He was married in 1880 to the Princess Stephanic, duchess of Saxony, daughter of Leopold II, king of the Belgians. It was one of the most brilliant nuptial ceremonies of the century. The royally wedded pair did not live happily, and the princess sought in vain for a separation. It was said that she was in love with an American when the policy of the state forced her to marry Rudolf

Rudolf's sudden death, which occurred at Meyerling, near Baden, on Jan. 30, 1889, astounded Europe and was at first supposed to have been caused by apoplexy. Then the statement was given out that the heir to Austria's throne had met his death by being accidentally shot while on a hunting expedition to Meyerling. Later the entire civilized world was startled by the news that the prince had committed

The archduke was deeply infatvated with the charms of the Baroness Veteera, a beautiful young girl, who returned his love. He wished to be united to her by morganatic marriage, but his father would not allow such an arrangement. On the evening of Jan. 29 the crown prince met the baroness in a gamekeeper's house not far from the castle of Mayerling and spent the evening with her. In the morning both were found dead, lying side by side upon a bed. It was asserted that the baroness had taken poison and that the prince had shot himself.

Franz Ferdinand seemed to be the logical successor to the Austrian throne, but, if it be true that he married the other day in London "a middle class lady from Kohlscheidt, near Aix-la-Chapelle," his chances of obtaining the crown have cer-tainly diminished. There is no aristocracy in Europe which is quite as haughty or as punctillous about matters of etiquette as the Austria-Hungarian, and the members of that body would certainly not be inclined to acknowledge as their sovereign any one who had married beneath him. Indeed such a marriage would deprive the heir presumptive of the rights of succession. Splendid noblemen these aristocrats are, and woe to any one among them who willfully proves false to the traditions of his order. For example, let the rumor spread that an Esterhazy intends to marry some one who is not of the purest blood, and straightway all possible obstacles will be placed in his path. These aristocrats are loath to believe that the heir presumptive has married a "middle class lady," and one who was formerly a housekeeper of Herr Krupp.

Those who assume he story to be true think it very possible that the archduke was influenced by motives which seemed to him to be excellent. He must have known, say these persons, that his accession to the crown would not be popular owing to his delicate health, and any case it is more than likely that he has no desire to become emperor. Being immensely rich, he can afford to do as he pleases, and, being a Hapsburg, he may prefer to marry the woman of his choice and to pass his days in comparative scelusion rather than to wed some potentate's daughter selected for him by the Austrian court and to reign as suzerain of Austria and Hungary.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

A Yellowstone Traveler Slides to the Vergo of a Precipice.

William H. Hill of Osawatomie, Kan. recently had an adventure in the Grand canyon of the Yellowstone which deserves to take high rank in the annals of narrow escapes. He had descended the canyon to Red rock, below Point Lookout. He was still 1,500 feet above the bottom of the great chasm. Below him an almost precipitous slope ran down hundreds of feet to the top of an absolutely perpendicular wall of great height.

Mr. Hill lost his footing and plunged downward along the steep slope. He knew what was below kim. The speed with which he approached destruction was rapidly accelerating and a growing avalanche was accompanying him. With a desperate effort he flung himself upon his back and dug his heels and cloows into the earth. It seemed to him that he slid for miles, but he was not going as fast as at the bearmy, however, she saw her student lover | ginning. Stones that he had started raced on ahead of him. A party of varsity men, old schoolfellows and of gentle birth, had sunk their shaft there and worked without success until their money was spent. One evening one of them at work at the bottom of the shaft shouted: "Haul up, boys! The time is come at last." They hauled up, and when it came to the top they found their comrade's lifeless body hanging from the chain. He had detached the bucket, tied a noose about his neck, fastened the noose to the chain and was hanged by his dearest

Killed by His Own Prescription.

The death of a chemist of Castellamare, Italy, through drinking in court the remainder of the contents of a bottle of medicine containing aconite among its ingredients to prove that he could not have killed a customer for whom he had made up the medicine, was recently announced. PATIENCE

It Is Hard to Acquire-trown of the Worthlest Life. By Lady Cook, nee Tennessee Claflin Patience is an excellent virtue, and one of those most difficult to acquire. Woman possesses it in a far greater degree than man, and this has been one of her compensations for long ages of servitude. It was necessary to her to endure or die, and she has learnt to en-dure. Yet in the face of all the difficulties and trials which beset through life, the wrongs and injuries, the diseases and disappointments which are incidental to all, patience is essential to every one, irrespective of sex. We admire courage always, but seldom admire passive fortitude. But courage may be a mere animal instinct, and usually is, whereas patience is a high in-tellertual quality, and is the fruit of reason or religion. Chaucer wrote in his "Persones Tale," "The philosophers sayth that patience is the virtue that suffereth debonairly all the outrages of adversitee, and every wicked word."

What armour, then, can be so effectual against the disasters of fate as this

The fretful, fussy individual is con-temptible to others and a misery to himself. Whenever a woman is destitute of this most womanly quality of quiet endurance, nature or education has robbed her of a distinguishing virtue of her sex, and she becomes one of are able to drive any man from house and home unless he has the patience of Job. Its cultivation, therefore, is of primary importance, and should begin at the earliest stage of life. But when we see how young infants are permitted, by the indulgence of foolish mothers, to defy them and their nurses, to struggle and scream and kick in paroxysms of passion whenever they are thwarted, and habitually disobey as they become older, we need not wonder with such a training they should grow up without self-control and be subject to criminal outbursts. So long vice roll on, and many a man whose evil passions control him would be tempted, if he knew all, to curse the irrational fondness of the mother who bore him.

God-like gift of enduring calmly?

The origin of our word denotes its meaning: "Patiens," suffering, or learning, that is to say, calmly. We have lost the old English verb, "to patient," which was in vogue down to Shakespeare's time. "Patient yourself, madam," says Titus Andronicus. Ours is a sterling, solid word, which has sustained its signification for ages, and has seen good service in the life of humanity. The martyrs for philosophy and religion, to say nothing of others, gave notable examples of its meaning when they cheerfully endured all the agonies that tyrannous intolerance could inflict upon them. "The virtue of the best pagans," says Lecky in "History of European 'Morals," perhaps as high an order as that of the best christians." And the patience of Pagan philosophers under persecution was no way inferior to that of the followers of the cross. Both have proved thousands of times over how sublimely men and women can suffer and die when sustained by this noblest of virtues. "Pound the body of Anaxarchus for thou dost not pound his soul," was said to the tymnt of Cyprus by the philosopher when brayed alive in a stone mortar with iron hammers to satisfy a mean revenge. "Follow God," was one of the most frequently repeated of Platonic maxims. "A God (what God I know not) dwells in every good man, said Epictetus. And Marcus Aurelius adds, "Offer to the God that is in thee a manly being, a citizen, a soldier at his post, ready to depart from life as soon the trumpet sounds." Another An alien is not permitted to acquire teaching of the Stoics was "the duty a title to land in Bermuda, either by of the most absolute and unquestion-

"To fear, to grieve, to be angry, is to be a deserter," said Aurelius, "Remember," wrote Epictetus, himself a cripple, "that you are but an actor, acting whatever part the Master has ordained. If He wishes you to represent a poor man, do so heartily; if a cripple, or a magistrate, or a private man, in each case your part with honor, . . God does not keep a good man in prosperity. Epicurus himself taught that "all good and all but the privation of feeling?" And Cicero declared that "all virtue is in action." "The proper study of a wise man," said a great modern philosopher. "is not how to die, but how to live, sage will think less than death." When Antonius Pius was dying, and the tribune asked him for the password of the night, the emperor replied, "Aequanimitas!" (patience!) Action, feeling, and resignation, form the three components of the worthiest life, but the crown of all is patience to know how to endure and how to wait; to render the mind superior to all accidents of time or place.
