entry there. The speaker took up the story of St. John the Baptist and king Herod, showing how Herod was near the kingdom of God, but missed it by his pride and sinful acts. John the Baptist, said Mr. Moody, was the greatest preacher that ever lived. He drew thousands from the cities into the country, where they camped for days at a time so as to be near the preacher. His preaching possessed the eloquence of heaven, yet he must be classed among the sensational preachers. He sin and wrong doing. It is agents of the devil who tell men they are all right. The speaker said he did not wonder at the lack of success of latter day preachers, when the preaching of John the Baptist would not touch the hearts of the people, and men actually turned from Christ's own words. God is no respector of persons. There is not one religion for the poor and another for the rich; all must accept the same truths. Sinners were counselled to give up their one pet sin that was keeping them out of the kingdom of God, and to declare themselves for God. The time to decide was at once. A little struggle and the victory is gained. No doubt Herod has ever since cursed himself that he did not take the advice of John

tian Rearing of Children-The Unity

Archbishop Cleary has issued a pastoral to the "clergy and faithful laity of the discess" upon the two bulwarks of the fortress of religion, the christian family and christian school, which are being determinedly assailed in the present day by "the forces issuing from the 'gates of hell." His grace in opening dwelt upon the purpose of the Eternal Word in dwelling amongst men, "not only of atoning for our sins but also of regenerating mankind, giving to humanity a new birth and a new life. The entire race of Adam had become so corrupt, so degraded, that nothing short of a new creation could suffice to restore it to its high estate. The individual, the family, the nations everywhere had to be born over again, and nursed and reared under a new system of thought and conduct, through the agencies of a new civilization, in conformity with their new and supernatural life leading to their heavenly destiny." And so because of the turpithe vice, the idolatry and the depravity of men the Messiah came to redeem the lost world. And first the family had to be purified, regenerated, transformed into a foundation of virtue and holiness. How was this to be effected? By the institution of the holy sacrament of matrimony, the indefectible corner-stone of the new civilization. A pledge from God to the Christian couple, that he will be with them continually by His particular Providence, and will exert His divine influtold the people plainly of their ence over their minds and hearts, their only language and manners and temper and whole demeanor in relation to each other and to their children; enabling them, and making it easy for them, to live happily together, in accordance with the laws and conditions of their state, and to bring up their offspring in the knowledge of the Creator and His holy fear and love. His grace lengthily dwelt on the holiness and happiness of Christian marriage and upon its influence in the rearing of children.

Saintly parents rear up children in holiness for the sanctification of Christian In discussing Catholic education as an essential duty of parents the mother 'is charged with the primary and most imperative duty. On her fidelity to this the Baptist and decide at once for the duty in its Catholic sense, will depend the salvation of the soul of the Catholic mother. her at the bar of divine justice, shall not turn upon money or dress or fashion or any of the things of mere secular life, but shall be "how did she bring up her children?" It is the husband's duty as much as the woman's. But it is mentioned directly as the woman's office, because the home is emphatically her sphere, and the children, in their earlier years, are immediately in her charge, always near her, deendent on her for everything, their eyes and their little hands always turned toand dislikings. She has chief part in the wards her, and their hearts bounding with affectionate promptings of ready compliance with her wishes, her likings moulding of their minds and hearts, and the formation of their character and manners. The husband is occupied with earning bread for the family; his days are mostly spent abroad; and he seldom gives direction for the children's conduct, except when the mother's authority needs to be sustained. Therefore the woman shall be saved or lost by this criterion, "Did she, by assiduous care and orderly direction of the affairs of domestic life, and her unfailing vigilance, train her children by word and example and timely instruction and correction, and motherly reproof and rebuke also in proper season," to abide with her "in faith and love and sanctification' (which means chastity) "and sobriety?" The apostle Paul in instruction to the bishop of Ephesus does not make her responsible for their perseverance in this good order of life after they shall have passed from under her control; the word he uses refers to their abiding in the practice of Hull, Michigan, is visiting at her sister's, those christian virtues while they abide in her home. For this she must answer. King Louis IX of France and St. John Chrysostom, doctor of the church and patriarch of Constantinople, are referred to at length as persons who had been trained by mothers, and who reflected the brighest of virtues. His grace briefly presented the Catholic doctrine of the unity and indissolubility of sacramental marriage. In these two indispensible characteristics rested the sole security for the christian family and the dignity and sacredness of woman. "The chief cause of all the horrors and defilements of the family home under the rule of paganism," remarked his grace, "was the degradation of woman. She had no place of honor in the household; she had no title to claim companionship with her husband; she was his slave or his toy, a creature of a lower order of of temper, whom he was free to eject from being, the victim of his whims and freaks his home on whatsoever day she failed to please him; and under certain circumstances could put her to death with impunity. This abject condition of the female in every part ed and obeyed; she is now the queen of churches. the household, and her dignity and authority are acknowledged by all, and society will insist that she shall be treated with tenderness and courtesy and the reverence due to her sex by every man in every walk of life. No wonder, therefore, that the church has in every age maintained these divine attributes of marriage with all the force at her command. Her bishops and popes have had to fight incessantly against the lustful passions of great and powerful men in high station, who strove to break down the whole system of christian civilization by trampling upon these most holy laws made by God the Saviour for the sanctification of mankind." The laws enforced against Phillip Augustue, king of France, king Henry VIII of England and Napoleon I, emporer of France, were recalled and he concluded : "For, in very truth, matrimony, as St. Paul declares, is 'a great sacrament in Christ and in the church'; it is sealed in wonder of the city. Are you about to put the Saviour's blood, and cannot be violated; it is the fundamental principle of christian civilization, and must be honored and esteemed most sacred by all true christians and good members of society."

There are thousands of sickly school-girls all over this broad land that are dragging their way through school-life who might enjoy that abundant life which belongs to youth by simple attention to hygienic laws and a proper course of treatment with Scott's Emulsion. This would make the blood rich, the heart-beat strong; check that tendency to exhaustion and quicken the appetite by strong company of artists, will certainly be a great treat to our people, and we trust that they will take advantage of this fact and give this very strong attraction, that is endorsed by the clergy and press, a rousing reception, as it certainly deserves.

The plan will open to-morrow at 10 s.m. strengthening the digestion. Our book tells more about Sent free.
