Assistance was called and Dr. Beeman spent the whole night trying to extract the leaden bullets and relieve the girl from her agony. Hopes of her recovery, however, are very slim. The sad affair was purely accidental.

Trouble In The Home.

This morning a farmer from a back township arrived in the city to consult a lawyer as to the conduct of the farmer's wife, who has taken a fancy to a neighbor, also a married man. The farmer claims his wife treats him cruelly, and openly displays her preferment for her neighbor. The couple have grown up children, a couple of married son and daughters residing in the western states. An eighteen year-old son at home takes sides with his mother, and has declared his regret that the old man was not an inmate of some lunatic asylum. The lawyer advised the farmer to sell out, convert his land, cattle and chattels into cash, and leave the country, and incidentally his wife to the affections of the man whom she has taken such

The Toronto Globe says that every lover of fair play will agree with the decision of the O.R. F. U. in the Orgoode protest. The protest was in some respects childish, one objection being that the referee had failed to declare the score at the finish. It is a blot on the record of the Osgoode club, if they have any, that they claimed consideration on such grounds. The protest of Orgoode hall football a mortgage held by the Central trust comclub against Hamilton was thrown out by the O.F.R.U. last night. There were about fifty affidavits produced at the meeting of the executive, all of which dethat it was dark, that time was over-spent twenty m nutes, that time-keeper Col line was incompetent and bad money on he game. The protest was thrown out by a vote of five to three.

Ellison reported to the police that during the night his warehouse, containing bones, bottles, rage, etc., had been broken into and a quantity of stuff stelen therefrom. Police constable McCul lach visited the various junk shops dealing in such material and found this morning Arthur Fields purchased a quantity of goods from Henry Long and Charles Killeen. Sergt. Snodden and constable McCullagh went in search of the two young men and found them at the house of K lleen. They were placed under arrest and at once taken to the police station, where they will re main until to morrow morning, when they will be placed on trial for the theft. They each had a small amount of money in their possession, about three dollars all told.

More Trouble At Home.

A day or two ago a resident of Sharbot ake called on a local lawyer for advice. His wife had left home, presumably to come to Kingston, but instead of doing so stopped off at Harrowsmith and went to live with a man in the vicinity the village, refusing to return to her home. The man wanted to know if his wife and her paramour could not be punished. He was told that the greatest punishment that could be inflicted upon them was for the abused husband to sell out his goods and leave the country. His wife and her associate would soon tire of each other's company.

The Iron Works.

The citizens' committee again met vesterday afternoon regarding the Abbott iron works bonus, the mayor presiding. The delegation gave their report of two days of inspection and consultation at Montreal, and it was unanimously resolved to adhere, and for two days only, to the original acceptance of the suggestion of the member of the firm then visit. ing Kingston. The committee declined to guarantee the bonus, though almost its course and that the lynch law be not certain it would pass under fair conditions. To guarantee would be unfair to the wealthy men who might sin, and alto-

DEATH OF LOUIS XV.

The King Died of the Most Virulent Form of Smallpex. "Marie Antoinette as Dauphine" is the title of an article by Miss Anna L. Bicknell in The Century. Miss Bicknell says: On April 28, 1774, Louis XV felt the first symptoms of illness while at Trianon, his favorite summer palace adjoining Versailles, to which he returned immediately. During the night of the 29th the characteristic eruption of smallpox appeared in its worst form. With admirable devotedness the king's daughters came to his bedside, notwithstanding the dreadful danger of contagion, and remained there day and night till his death. Marie Antoinette and asked admittance to his room, but, for very evident reasons, neither the heir apparent nor his wife was allowed to breathe an atmosphere so dangerous that more than 50 persons took the smallpox merely from having crossed the gallery before the door of the king's room. M. de Letorieres took the disease fatally, merely through having opened the door to look at the king for two minutes.

Regardless of danger, the archbishop of Paris came to Versailles. He was anxious to secure the means of repentance and a Christian death to the wretched sinner, but, at the same time, he declared that he would not allow the last sacraments of the church to be administered to the dying man unless Mme. du Barry were previous ly dismissed from the palace. On the 4th of May the Duchesse d'Aiguillon took her to a country house belonging to the Due d'Aiguillon. There was consequently no further obstacle to the administration of the last rites of the church. Shortly afterward his condition became more alarming and it was evident that the end

The courtiers crowded in the large room called the "Salle de l'Œil de Bœuf, where they habitually awaited the king's pleasure. The carriages were in readiness to take the royal family to Choisy. The candle was extinguished. The great clock was stopped at the fatal hour-3 p. m. It was the 10th of May, 1774. The rush of the courtiers, with a noise like thunder, as they hastened to pay homage to the new sovereign, was the first announcement of the great event to the young heir and his wife. Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette burst into tears and with a joint impulse fell on their knees, exclaiming: "God help us and protect us We are too young to reign! The king was not yet 20; the queen was in her nine

Mme, de Noailles came into the room where they had remained together in seclusion and anxious expectancy and addressing them by their new titles, begged them to receive the dignitaries who had come to pay homage to the king and queen. The queen appeared leaning on the king's arm; weeping bitterly, she received the first visits of the royal family and the principal officials, but the physicians urged the necessity of immediate departure. The carriages were ready and the whole court set off for Choisy, leaving the wretched remains of the late sovereign to the care of servants and workmen. The unfortunate man who soldered the lead coffin died within 21 hours. The body was taken to St. Denis, the burial place of the kings of France, during the following night, with a military escort, followed by the execration of the populace loudly expressed on the way. The press of conflict drew nearer minute by minute. The insurgents, getting the vorst of it, were falling back upon the shelter of the tarmstead. I was exultant. Now, by peering through the narrow slit that did duty for window in my carcel, I caught spasmodic glimuses of the strifefigures in dirty blue flitting from tree trunk to tree trunk, ever in the direction of the house, shadows in gray, with red sashes worn bandolier fashion-the president's seldiery-advancing steadily and surely, pouring in a hot fire that bade fair soon to make of the retreat a demoralized rout. A few stray bailets synttered against the walls of the aboveria, but I was ter fascinated to heed the warning. WANTS HER DAUGHTER.

Release Asked of Child in the Dominican Convent at Gloversville

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 - Bridget Conaty. of 635 West Forty-Sixth street, asked magistrate Flammer in Yorkville police court to help her recover her daughter Nelhe, aged eleven, who is in the Dominican convent at Gloversville, N.Y. The girl and her brother, John, je, were placed in the convent four years ago. At the time the boy was five years old, and subsequently died in the convent. The Constys were then in poor circumstances but now are comfortably situated, and the mother wants the daughter back. The Gerry society placed the child in the convent, and upon the mother's application, gave a certificate authorizing the convent authorities to release the daughter. Mrs. Conaty lost the certificate, and $480 at her visit to secure her child. The convent people refused to release the child without a certificate, and the Gerry society refuses to issue a duplicate. The magistrate advised her that she could do nothing and told her to make an other application to the Gerry society.

HANNA'S ELECTION ASSURED.

Republican Majority in Ohio's Legislature On Joint Bailot Is Fifteen. COLUMBUS, O. Nov. 15 .- All doubt regarding senator Hanna's return to the senate has been removed. The fact was developed yesterday that the republicans would have a majority of fifteen instead of five on joint ballot in the next legislature. Four fusion members of the house from Hamilton county and one fusion senator from the Hamilton county district, who in all previous calculations had been classed with the democrate, announce in private informa tion sent to the clerks of the house and senate that they will act with the republicans, and this determination on their part gives the republicans a majority of fifteen on joint ballot, thus ensuring the return of Mr. Hanna to the United States
