THE GRAVE OF FRANKLIN.

No Monument Marks the Resting Place of the Statesman and Philosopher. It does not speak very well for American patriotism that the grave of Benjamin Franklin has for years been neglected, but such is the fact. The last resting place of the great statesman and philosopher might, for all the care that is taken of it, be the grave of some obscure and friendless more tal whose common clay was held as cheaply as his common mind had been. Franklin's grave is in a corner of the old churchyard at Fifth and Arch streets, Philadelphia, in the heart of the business district. It is marked by a plain marble slab, now timeworn and discolored, on which appears the simple inscription, "Benjamin and Deborah Franklin, 1790. That is all. Not a monument, not even a headstone. There is an air of desolation and desertion about this corner of the churchyard. There is not even the green thatching of sod which nature generally provides for the humblest grave, but the earth all about the stone is bare and cheer-

Indeed the church sexton is authority for the statement that they not only will do nothing to keep the grave in repair, but refuse to allow any one else to do so." Frequently he has received offers of money from visitors who have been distressed at the forlorn appearance of the grave. But the Franklins of today have told him to accept no subscriptions for such a purpose, saying that Franklin wished it so, "being a plain man and averse to display."

Perhaps this is so, but the neglect is hardly creditable to the nation. The simple slab and its brief miscription were both designed by Franklin before he died, and the work was done by a stonecutter of his acquaintance to whom he gave minute instructions When he was a young man. Franklin wrote this fanciful epitaph for himself, which has become famous: "The body of Benjamin Franklin, printer, like the cover of an old book, its contents torn | N.S., saye: out and stripped of its lettering and gilding, lies here, food for worms.
