TER TO OBTAIN MONEY.

The Wronged Girl Did Not Appear in Court Nor Wish the Case to be Prosecuted-The Mother Did Not Want the Money But the Sister Did-The Case Should Never Have Been Brought Into Court-

Decision of Costs Reserved The summing up of the case of Byrnes vs. Wakeford occupied over an hour yesterday afternoon. J. L. Whiting for the defence, not having called any witnesses during the hearing of the case, made an able address. The case, as defined by him, was an action brought in by a young sister of the willingly akused for her own aggrandizement. In the usual seduction case the mother or father of the girl included, was present in the court to give sanction to the action instituted. But in this particular case the mother did not even give consent to the action. The girl herself wished no action to be taken, and she was not even present in court. The mother was not anxious to prosecute the defendant, and did not want his money. The trouble, no doubt, arose, and the defendant admitted that he might have brought on the girl's illness, but the fact that no evidence was given to prove that he did, or that he was a parent of the result, was sufficient to relieve him from court-pronounced guilt. The defendant had departed from the path of right, and he was sorry for ed policemen. it. He was willing to make any legiti-

In endless variety, 5c to $1.50 expressed a wish to keep the affair quiet. The Mobile arrived at New York with her c sum of $100 to defray expenses of the girl to Toronto. That amount was handed to Christina Byrnes, the girl's sister, through Rev. J. E. Starr. There are statements to prove that she only paid a little over $10 to her sister, evidently pocketing the remainder. Her policy in instituting the charge against defendant was to make capital, willingly disregarding her sister's The Daily Note Book For Whig Readers reputation.
