A GIRL PHOTOGRAPHER.

Miss Tonnesen's Original Methods Have

Made Her Very Successful. Miss Beatrice Tonnesen of Chicago is the young woman who has developed the business of photographic advertising. Probably you have notical the radical change in the appearance of magazine advertisements. Instead of the crude, meaningless pictures with which they were often illustrated you now see beautiful half tone reproductions of artistic photographs, in which all sorts of merchandise are pictured in a most attractive manner. It is Miss Tonnesen who supplies most of these photographs. Her pictures have become famous for their artistic merit. One reason for this is that she spares no pains in securing for models some of the best looking young women who can be induced to pose for her camera. She is al ways on the hunt for models. When she sees a pretty shopgirl in a street car, she makes her acquaintance, asks her to come to her studio and nine times out of ten has her in the back pages of a magazine within a month or two.

Miss Tonneson began as an enthusiastic amateur photographer when she lived in Oshkosh three years ago. She had studied art in a general way for several years and had made a specialty of portrait work. She applied to a local photographer for instruction and gained experience by photo graphing her friends. She became so skill ful an artist that she was advised to set up a studio of her own, and she did so. Be fore the end of her first year as a professional photographer her ambition had out grown her surroundings, and she moved to Chicago, where her widowed sister, Mrs. Clara Kirkpatrick, was conducting the grain commission business which her husband had left.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick saw the possibilities of her younger sister's scheme, and sold graphs of Chicago people, and then Chinese reform. branched out by making artistic groups. which found a ready sale at art stores Finally an advertiser asked for a picture in which his corsets should figure.
