A HAIR PULLING MATCH

Anderson Bagg'd by Wife No. 1 and Her Two Sisters. Rochester, N.Y., Democrat.

CREAMING women, pulling the hair of a black-eyed young girl, and a handsome and badly frightened young man who accompanied her, created quite a sensation in the entrance to the Granite building.

The officer arrested the whole party and brought them to the police station, where a strange and romantic story was told by all of them in concert.

The young man's name is William James Anderson, a French-Canadian, of Kingston, Ont. A few weeks ago he deserted his wife and his two children and went to Montreal.

Both Anderson and his second wife admitted to Chief Hayden that one of the three sisters who had pursued him was his first wife, and admitted that he had been married again.

Anderson and his new wife sat close to each other in the police station, holding each other's hands, while the three sisters glared at them, and occasionally shouted: "Oh, if it wasn't for them officers we'd plug her. We'll just wait, and we'll get a chance to plug her yet."
