ONE LAW FOR ALL.

The Toronto Star very properly comments upon the difference with which justice is administered in different places. One man, in Toronto, robbed his employer of $23, and was sentenced to a month's imprisonment. Another, in Peterboro, robbed his employer of $3,000, and, upon the representation of friends, as manifested in a petition, is allowed to go on suspended sentence, "Our law and judiciary," says the Star, "may be of a superior order, but it is far from perfect. It does not always discourage wrong-doing when it is on a large scale," Certainly it appears that rank and station and the influence of friends have a great deal to do with the manner in which the law punishes some offenders, and the law should show no distinctions under any circumstances. The same offence should have the same results in every place; the greater the offence the greater should be its penalty. There are sometimes mitigating event Star's parallel cases.

IT IS A FAIRY TALE.

A Toronto paper, the versatile and lively Star, professes to have it from one who knows, that in the liberal cabinet to be formed immediately after the general election, and it's generally conceded that the conservative government goes into oblivion -Messrs. Ross, Gibson and Dryden, of the Ontario cabinet, will be members. . It is further announced that there is to be a reduction in the number of ministers, and that the old-time federal liberals are kick ing because the Ontario ministers are to get the plums in the federal government. All of which is really silly, so very silly as to be utterly unworthy of a moment's consideration. There is evidently going to be a sort of landslide, and in favor of the liberals, when parliament is dissolved and the people are asked to elect a new house, but until it occurs Mr. Laurier is not going to select his colleagues, and it is safe to say that he has not been indulging in such nonsense. Some fellow has presumed to pose as a mind reader, and to reflect the thoughts that are passing through Mr. Laurier's head, and he has succeeded in making a fool of himself. The Star dignifies the nonsense unduly by referring to it as a fairy tale.

GOLF PLAYING ON-SUNDAY.

Some days ago a decision of the county judge in York county surprised some people, because it declared that a man who swore so wickedly as to seriously disturb a neighbor was not an offender within the meaning of the law, in that it had no control over his thoughts and language while he stood upon his own premises.

Now another remarkable decision comes along. Three members of the Toronto golf club, having nothing else to do, and little consideration for the eternal fitness of things, played golf on Sunday, May 26th, and Magistrate Richardson, (presumably of West Toronto Junction), fined them for an alleged infraction of the Lord's day act. His conviction has just been quashed by Judge McDougall, who holds that "golf is not a game of ball, similar in any sense to the game enumerated in or intended to be prohibited by the statute, and also that it is not a noisy

Such decisions should not go unchallenged. That is the people of this country who are interested in the proper observance of the Sabbath should not let the case rest with Judge McDougall's disposal of it. It should go to a higher court in order that his definition of the law may be either confirmed or revised, and if the law, upon the final showing, needs amendment it should be sought without delay. Golf is as much an amusement to some people as any other game, and Sunday is not the day for it. The young men who indulge in it, thus, are singularly lacking in religious instinct and refinement.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

The Mail and Empire made great fun of the proposition of the London Advertiser, to the effect that Canada was not a free country, and never would be, until it had the power to create at will lords and dukes and earls and barons, and establish all the orders prevalent in Great Britain and other countries, "Coming, as it does, from a liberal newspaper," says the Mail and Empire, "it is quite within the bounds of possibility that Mr. Laurier will make the scheme a plank in his trade policy. He has, to be sure; an objection to titles, but if the prosperity of of her country could be advanced thereby he would, no doubt, change his opinion. He certainly would, and with good reason, but there is no evidence that Mr. Laurier will favor knighthood for personal reasons, Mr. Laurier shines best in his plainness of manner and speech. As Sir Winfred he would not be so great a man, nor stand so high in the public estimation. The right to travel in the same company with Sir Adolphe Caron, whose political record parliament has had occasion to look into, is a doubtful honor.

Moreover the conservatives have no notion of letting the distribution of a few cheap titles go over to the liberals when they come into power as they surely will after the next election. Hon. Mr. Dickey, one of the newest members of the government, an up-to-date young man, has started in to make a few hohorary captains and majors and colonels of the militia, and when on nature, and especially on the longings of the human heart for the empty baubles called titles. Already a feeling of disgust is setting in, and Mr. Dickey's scheme is sneezed at by the men who have the titles they are entitled to as a result of worthy

A FRIENDLY DISAGREEMENT.

The Patric, a powerful French paper, published in Montreal, having declared its adherence to the political programme. of the Avenir and Pays Mr. Laurier and Mr. Marchand, the leaders of the liberal parties in the dominion and province of Quebec, have felt it to be necessary to write a few lines to the publisher, H' Beaugrand, and to explain that the Patrie did not politically represent their views.

Mr. Beaugrand seems to have disliked the messages, disliked the manner of their delivery, and writes in reply articles in which he expresses a preference for the old French school of politicians and their programme as distinguished from the English school and their programme. Incidentally he reviews, by a reference to his lecture on journalism delivered in 1886, the "reforms" advocated by Aviner and Pays' between 1847 and 1854, some of which still popular, and for some of which in the light of the present day it is not wise to press, notably for "independence, republic, annexation to the United States, and the separation of Upper and Lower Can-

The interchange of sentiments between the political leaders is quite interesting, but it is conducted in the most friendly fashion. The conservative papers refer to the discussion as the evidence of a split in the party, but that is a strange deduction in the face of this the closing paragraph, of one of Mr. Beaugrand's articles: "I am too old now to change my habits and my way of thinking, and you are too proud and too great an admirer of the English system to ask me to make a compromise, which, anyhow, I would make for no one. If you will allow it, let us continue as in the past. I believe you sincerely konest, and it will be a great day for country when Lord Aberdeen puts the administration of public affairs into your hands.

The split, therefore, referred to by the conservative press is stretch of the imagination.

THE EVENTS AT MARTIN'S OPERA HOUSE THIS WEEK.

Had to Make a Pretty Bridal Gift-What Will be the Fashious in Furs-The Garments For the Future Duchess of Mariborough.

I read the other day of a pretty bridal gift, so unique that I am going to tell you about it; any clever girl can make it at small expense. First, procure at the stationer's two pieces of cardboard of heavy quality; the kind used for picture mats. Have them cut ten by sixteen inches each, punch two holes in the back edge of each, about four inches apart. Then procure a water-color pad, using as many leaves off the back as you wish your book to contain. have come to pass, and some of which are If you cannot obtain a water-color pad use any good, heavy linen paper, which should be unruled, of course. Punch holes in the leaves to correspond with the outside. Upon the cover have a monogram sketched composed of the first letter of the bride's and groom's last name. Gild this monogram. Just inside the cover fasten one of the wedding invitations by pasting the face of the envelope to the book so that the invitation may be removed at pleasure. On one of the extra sheets of water color paper fasten the photographs of the bridal couple. This page may be prettily decorated, according to taste, in water colors; a garland of flowers, or true lovers knot, daintly done, will make it quite artistic. Next buy a blank marriage certificate and fasten it upon one of the last pages. Finish the back edges by pasting narrow, white, satin ribbon over them. Lastly, tie the leaves and cover together by passing white, satin ribbon through the holes and tying, loosely, in a pretty bow, upon the top, making long loops and ends. . At the wedding this book is placed upon a desk and all the guests write their names in it; the officiatcate. Later on the bride puts a list of her presents, a piece of her wedding gown, and the names of the places visited on her trip, in the book, and I assure you after all that the simple little present becomes very valuable in her eyes; a precious souvenir from which she would not easily part. Just try this experiment and see what a pretty gift you can make.

> Now that the days are 'cold and sharp how one's eye turns with pleasure to the furriers' windows. All women look well in furs; no more becoming environment for feminine features has yet been found, and, as they appear this winter, in quaint and exquisitely dainty combinations it seems as though the very acme of richness in wo man's garments had been obtained.

Last week I had the pleasure of spending two hours at Renfrew's, Que., and revelling in the beauties there displayed. must confess that I came away with a very covetous soul and a little envy of the wealthy dames who might indulge in these beautiful luxuries. There were large and small wraps, superb creations for evening and carriage wear, and a host of fanciful designs in the more prosaic everyday coats and capes. The highest priced bit of luxury was a sealskin ulster reach ing quite to the ground, a scalloped cape, bordered with sable, resting on the shoulders. The fronts were also edged with sable, while the huge collar was made of the same rich fur; the full sleeves were gathered into bands of it at the wrists. Seven hundred and fifty dollars was the price asked for this beauty, and although it sounds a great deal when one came to think it over it seemed rather reasonable for the wealth of valuable fur this garment contained. The muffs were huge affairs, and many of them trimmed with sable tails, set on like mercury wings. In the combination garments there were wraps worthy a queen's wearing. One, a beauty, was of the richest crimson, brocaded silk, lined throughout with ermine. Another was of white velvet brocade, lined with sable; the effect of the dark, rich fur with the white velvet was magnificent. For the more practical uses of life there were the new scalskin jackets, The ultra stylish shape having a perfectly plain full back, while wide revers and giant pearl buttons adorn the front. The use of pearl | a total of 479,207 pounds, which netted buttons on sealskins is a distinctive | $47,920 70, and a grand total of 431,650 feature of this season's modes. Most of | pounds of fruit, which realized $83,417, this the Persian lamb coats had box fronts and ripple backs, with huge sleeves, of course. After viewing innumerable styles I came to the conclusion that for beauty and richness of effect, there is nothing like seal and sable or seal and fine bear; these shaggy furs set off the fine richness of the seal and give it the depth which it lacks in itself.

Talking of furs reminds me I heard the other day that Miss Vanderbilt is getting five chests of furs from Russia; let us devotedly hope that she may not suffer from cold in the coming English winters. I believe that the wedding gown is finished and is a dream of beauty. Satin, not what we generally call satin, but the real, old-fashioned shimmering stuff, thick as a board, and gleaming like ivory, is the foundation, this is covered with billows of priceless lace and embroidered with pearls. The court train, I am told, is a triumph of art in itself; lined throughout with satin and edged with heavy pearl embroidery. Let us hope that this weight of satin and pearls will be the heaviest the young shoulders may be called upon to bear for many a day. The bridesmaid's costumes are to be, most simple, but a chic effect will be given by the combination of colors, The frocks are fashioned of white satin perfectly plain skirts, in direct contrast to the bridal robe. The bodices are gathered at the throat and drawn down into pale blue sashes, which fasten in front towards the left side, full sleeves and plain collars finish these gowns. The hats are huge Gainsborough's made of hussar blue velvet, while the six large plumes, the only trimming, are of pale blue, the exact shade of the sashes. These hats are turned up directly in front and a little toward the back, while over the front falls three of the tips; two more are placed at the side, and the sixth one is brought around the crown to lie against the coils of the hair. This touch of a light blue with the deep shade and the white frocks trimmed with the

I believe there are several tailor made gowns for travelling. Amidst this wealth and glitter one is apt to lose sight of the fact that a woman's heart is beating beneath it all and that this grand marriage is to make or mar a young life. Let us wish for this girl, weighed down with so much of the world's wealth, that sunshine and happiness, which proverbially go hand-in-hand for the bride. Tennyson has really shown us the secret of a happy marriage when he says :

pale blue is most artistic.

Love took up the harp of life, And smote on all the chords with might, Smote the chord of self that passed, In trembling music out of sight."

This is the charm; mutual self-sacrifice, and life is a beautiful poem. A poem, which we meet, alas! all too rarely .-

Big Shipments of Fruit.

During the peach Season 36,897 baskets were shipped by express from Leamington, at a value of $30,256 94, and by freight 6,268, valued at $5,139 76, making a total of 43,165 baskets, valued at $35,396 30. The total amount of other fruit shipped from the same station from Aug. 1 to Oct. 19 by freight amounted to 308,440 pounds, which brought $30,844. The total amount of small fruit shipped by express was 171, 767 pounds, valued to $17,176.70, making being the product of 600 acres. Besides these there are three smaller farms, which produced over $8,000, and it is estimated $20,000 worth of fruit was sold and carried out in waggons. From June 1st until Aug. 1 there were shipped 209,070 baskets of berries, of a value of $20,907, making $132,354 that the fruit growers of that district realized this year.

Money Panic In The City. Nothing disorganizes all sorts of business so effectually as a money panic in the city of London. It signifies that something is wrong with the foundation upon which the whole fabric of commerce is erected. The commercial world turns giddy as it were, and loses its head. In such a case even the wisest man does not know what to do. In our personal troubles, happily we are not so helpless. If we suffer from headache, indigestion, loss of appetite, disorder of the stomach or liver, we simply take our Molloway's Pills and we find relief. Arden Announcements.

ARDEN, Oct. 29.-The continued dry weather is making water scarce. Nearly all the wells in the village are dry and the lakes are very low. Yesterday morning was very cold, being the sharpest frost this fall. Duncan Fraser and family have moved to Deseronto. Farmers are well through digging roots, which turn out well and are getting ready for winter.

A ripple of excitement was caused in this neighborhood on Wednesday, 23rd inst., by the wedding of C. H. Cook, of Bisonnette & Co's store, Arden, to Frankie, only daughter of William Ewings, a wellto-do farmer of the township of Olden. The ceremony took place at St. John's church, near the home of the bride. The Rev. R. Coleman officiated. A goodly number were invited and the little country church was crowded with friends from Kennebec and Olden. Miss Miles, of Portsmouth, was bridesmaid, and Mr. Hinch, of Camden, attended the groom, both being cousins of the bride. After the wedding a large number of invited guests partdok of a sumptuous luncheon at the home of the bride's father; afterwards the happy couple left by the afternoon express from Mountain Grove station on their wedding tour. The presents were valuable and useful.

John Scott's wife has presented him with a son. There was no English church service on Sunday evening. Several ministers are assisting at the revival services at the Methodist church. The Arden cheese factory closes to day.
