WHEN THE QUEEN DIES. Her Successor Must Sit on "Lin Fail," the Destiny Stone.

It has been a very long time since Eugland has had any inauguration cere monies-so long, in fact, that most of us have doubtless forgotten the odd little duties necessary to be performed in mak-ing a crowned head.

But some day before many more years have passed the coronation performance will have to be all gone over again, and it will be one of the hugest days the good old country has had in a long time. It will be the same gushy, gala occasion that it has always been since the days of Solomon, and all London town will look as though it were Fourth of July. Everybody will be drested up and somebody will be a very great king. however, it happens to be a woman who gets the crowning she will be the haud-somest lady in all the world, and whether the new ruler be man or woman, one thing can be counted on-his or her face will be stamped on all the candy and all the coin of the kingdom. But there are so many interesting things about a coronation. In the first place, there is the Lia Fail, or "Stone of Destiny." That alone is one of the most interesting things in all the Kingdom of Great Britain, and one never hears it mentioned except at crowning time. 'It is almost as interesting as the story of Grail, and that one rarely hears mentioned except when a new poet laureate is to be chosen.

Tucked away in an unused corner Westminster Abbey is the great coronation chair. Of course, it isn't left around where tourists can flop down in it and wipe their muddy feet on its carved legs, but it is there just the same, and has been for a great many centuries. The coronation chair alone is something that one could contemplate and dream about and write poems about for a whole season, but the most interesting part of the coronation chair is the part you don't see. It is the "Stone of Destiny," which is covered up in the seat. All of the kings and queens who have been crowned in England since the year 1991 have sat upon that "Stone of Destiny" hidden in the sent of the great chair. Probably half does, pevertheless, and there is a story as long and as old almost as a succession of Egyptian kings connected with that old stone.

The first authentic history we have of the "Stone of Destiny" was when it was the coronation stone of Scotland many centuries ago. For hundreds of years it was kept at Scone, and tradition told that it was the stone Jacob used for a pillow. It was said by the old Scottish historians that from the East it had been brought to Scotland, where it was sacredly kept at Scone for a long time and used only when somebody was to be crowned. Modern historians, Skene, for example, have attempted to rob this sacred stone of a trifle of its impressive history by claiming that it was quarried from the rocks near Scone about the tenth century.

But whether that be true or false, is a fact that the stone was thought to be of sufficient worth to arouse a desire in the breast of Edward I. to have it to use in his own kingdom, and in the year 1296 he sent an expedition into Scotland for the purpose of getting it, and they carried out his instructions to the letter, as was customary in those days. Since that time the "Stone of Destiny" has been hid in the seat of the coronation chair of England, where nobody ever sees it but the crowned heads, and they only sit on it, and just for a few minutes in a lifetime at that.

But there is another very interesting feature of coronation day, and that is the oath of office that is taken by the ruler to be. Following is the form of the oath that was taken by the first ruler of England on the day of coronation, and will be taken by the next ruler, provided the form of Government remains as it is to-day:-

When all things are ready the King or Queen steps up into the coronation chair, carrying a copy of the form and order of the coronation service. The Archbishop of Canterbury then advances and asks these questions:-

"Sir (or madam), is your Majesty willing to take the oath?" "I am willing."

"Will you solemnly swear and promise to govern the people of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the dominions thereto belonging, according to the statutes in parliament agreed on and the respective laws and customs of the same?" "I solemnly promise to do so,"

"Will you to the utmost of your power maintain the laws of God, the true proreformed religion established by law? And will you maintain and preserve in-Church of England and Ireland, and the doctrine, worship, discipline and government thereof as by law established within England and Ireland and the territories thereunto belonging? And will you preserve to the bishops and clergy of England and Ireland and to the churches there committed to their charge all such rights and priivleges as do, or shall, appertain unto them, or any of them?" "All this I promise to do." The sovereign then goes to the altar and laying his or her hand upon the Gospels takes the following oath:-"The things which I have heretofore promised I will perform and keep, so Th sovereign then kisses the book and

FORESTALLING THIEVES.

Why Thomas A. Edison Patents Everything He Invents. As Thomas A. Edison watched the numping of the air from a glass tube in his laboratory a day or two ago, a man said to him:-

"You patent every little thing you discover, don't you, Mr. Edison."
"I do," said Mr. Edison; "and do you know why I do it?" "I suppose you do it so you will reap the benefit of your discovery," was the

"I thought you'd say that," said Mr. Edison, "and I don't suppose you will believe me when I tell you it isn't so, nevertheless, I discover a great many things that I would be glad to give to the public for nothing, but I don't dare I patent these things to save myself from defending law suits. There are a lot of sharks in this world who are continually on the lookout for new things, and when one of them hears of something new he hustles to the patent office to see if it is patented. If it isn't, he claims it as an original discovery and files his claim. Then he will turn right around and, like as not, begin a suit with the man who invented the thing for making or using it. The inventor will say: 'But I discovered this thing first; 1 am the inventor.' He is referred to the patent office, where he finds the official claim of original invention. The fact that the papers are filed long after he made his discovery does not help him, for all the other man does is to hire a fellow to swear that he made the discovery a month or two prior to the date the inventor claims. It sounds ridiculous, probably, but it is a fact that there are often races between the inventors and the sharks to reach the patent office, the sharks having had early information about the inventor's discovery. There are many such races, and thousands of dollars depend on each one. What I say is literally true."-New

The Front Stoop Cynic.

Cirius Baker had sat in silence for than half an hour on his front the people in the kingdom to-day don't stoop watching the bicycles as they know that such a thing exists, but it flashed past. He seemed even more displeased with the human race than usual. Paints, His wife did not try to talk to him. She knew he was angry about something and was having a good time. "Yes, ma'am," he answered. "Some thing does hurt me. It is not a mere trifling physical pain, either. I am envious of the past, shocked at the present and apprehensive of the future. "Goodness, gracious! It isn't so bad as that, is it?"

"It's worse. For several years I have been asking myself whither we are drifting and then giving the conundrum up because I qualled before the awful truth that the answer involved. But there is no use in trying to conceal it any longer. We are plunging over the Niagara Falls of iconoclasm into the whirlpool of social chaos. That's where we are drifting. And you women are responsible for it." "Sirius, be just, if you cannot be generous. Don't blame me personally for the doings of other members of my sex. I don't ride a hicycle."

"No; but you'd like to. There! Look at 'em!" he growled as another party went by, "A short time ago we had the summer girl. She wore white dresses and frizzed her hair and kept her complexion white, and made you glad she didn't have wings to fly away with. She was a delight to the poets and a rollef to every-day people. Where is she now? Dead as the dodo. She's put on bloomers and divided skirts and leggings and an alpine hat. She has stayed out in the wind and sun till she has gotten her face tanned and in every way transformed her once charming identity until, as a matter of fact, she no longer exists." "Well," said his wife, in a philosophical tone, "there is never a loss without some gain. She will be replaced in some "That's the worst of it. She has been replaced. And how? What have we now in her stead? The summer man. What is he? He's a freak; that's what he is. He wears a white sweater with red trimming around the collar and bangs his hair. He puts on a dove-colored suit and rainbow stockings and takes more pride in his lower limbs than the leader of the Amazon march in a burlesque show. He is a gaudy patch of color on the landscape and he is so much afraid of not being noticed that he rings his bell fession of the Gospel, and the Protestant to make you look at him. Worth Rememberiug. It is not always the majority who make the most noise. The suggestion is as useful in religion as in politics. Skeptics have for a good while claimed the earth and all the people on it. Now, or very soon they are or will be everybody. An old story relates that three tailors met in a little room in Tooley Street, London, and put forth a manifesto, which began: "We, the People of England " An ancient story of Greek origin, has been revised after this fashion: trader offers for sale three car loads of frogs. A buyer, standing near, offers to take three dozen, and the bargain closed. But when the dealer presents his frogs, there are only one dezen, and he confesses that he never had more than a dozen but excuses himself by saying. "They made so much noise that thought there were three car-loads." A minority opinion often makes a noise of about that ratio to numbers.

He Escaped, but His After Experience Made

Him Prefer Captivity. The following remarkable story of adhead of the Paris detective service, by an escaped convict named Bourdet, Ac cording to his story. Bourdet, an engineer by trade, was sentenced to a long term of penal servitude in the year 1881, and was sent to the penal settlement in French Guiana. In 1885 he determined to escape. Owing to his efficiency as a workman he was made foreman of a in an isolated part of the forest under | their duty and lived well. Such indivithe supervision of a warden. They made their way some distance down the coast and then landed to push their way through the forest. One soon succumbed to fever and was abandoned to die. The fugitives were next set upon by some Indians, who captured two of them and Bourdet and his two remaining companions escaped. Their next adventure was with a large serpent, which they unfortunately stumbled over, and the reptile seized one of the men and crushed him to death. The other two, being unable to rescue their remaining companion, after enduring terrible hardships, reached the river forming the boundary of Dutch Guiana. At this stage the companion sold his remaining rice and Bourdet, left to himself, crossed the river on an improvised craft, and after much privation managed to continue his journey to Georgetown. He subsequently worked for several years in the gold mines, and, having amassed a small sum of money, he returned to France to see his relatives. On his way through Paris he was robbed of his money by a swindler. In spite of this he reached his home, but as his reception there was decidedly tain employment, and being in danger of starvation, he had no resource but to give himself up to the police and request to be sent back to the penal settlement. A Salty Transaction.

"Of course I have been taken in occasionally," said the general, "but I have been very fortunate considering number of devices there are for getting the best of men who have a little money to invest once in a while.

"About ten years ago I came uncomfortably near to being done up for all I was worth. After consultation with a few gentlemen of means I concluded to join them in a mining, speculation. SOME INDIAN LEGENDS. Superstition Led the Pima Tribe to Give

Up Polygamy.

At the time and for centuries after the sedvent of the Pima Indians into this country they practised polygamy, and this will show how a little superstitious belief will change a custom of centuries. As the story goes, a short time after the restoration of the Sahuaro (Hassen). the whole tribe was stricken with a strange disease. It was malignant in form and many deaths resulted. The great medicine men and magicians from all parts of the country were called together for counsel to see by what means they could propitiate Mo-kik-a-num, the death god. The magicians labored long and earnestly, but still the death god refused to stay his hand. It seems that fasting has had much to do in the ritual of the aboriginial. I have always noted that when communicating their superstitious beliefs, when necessary to fast for a given period. When they found they could not subdue the evil death god by magic the magicfasted for three days. They were, how-"When our man came back he gave ever, privileged to eat roots and drink the time singing their songs to the sun noon of the third day, an immense herd of antelope appeared on a low hill not chief magician arose and said to the people must do likewise; they are spiritgod." While the medicine men were "Reaching the mine unhersided I looking the antelopes paired off and passed on. As the last pair disappeared the chief magician spoke. He said: "Return to your homes and then let each man consult with his neighbor and be content with one woman (ova) for wife. That will appease and gratify our sun god. Continue to prowill abide wth us no longer." The people were very reluctant to break up their polygamish homes, but, being driven by fear of death, they consented. It is a tributed to the influence of the Jesuit

Strange as it may appear, witchcraft was neither known nor practised among the Indians prior to the advent of the Jesuit Fathers. The first martyr to the witchcraft was an old Indian woman was put to death for stopping the water running down the Santa Cruz. A short distance from this woman's house the water sank. Where the water disappeared some of the Indians saw the old woman digging holes in the sand with her hands. That was sufficient evidence of witchcraft against her. She was arraigned, condemned and burned at the stake. Finally the medicine men got too assiduons in the hunt after witches. There were too many human bonfires being made, so the people changed the proceedings and burned several of the medicine men. From that time to the present day, instead of accusing human beings o witchcraft, the present generation o Indians accuse and find witches in animals-dogs, cows and horses-and in many cases they find witches in inani mate things, such as stones, rags and
