> Mr. Henry Guimond not long since read an interesting paper before the Pennsylvania Editorial Association at phone 89. Atlantic City, N. J., upon the topic, 'The Advertising Department." Many good points were borught out in the speech, but the closing paragraph borders on the facetious after this fashion :-"I feel that perhaps I have been firing at a bull's eye with a shot-gun, but I close with the fervent hope that by the mental use of your blue pencils you may have brought out, here and there, a lucid 203 idea. In any event may what I have said or attempted to say not be received as was the sermon of an eloquent Chicago preacher not long since. He had referred to God's tender care and wisdom and knowledge of the needs of each of us. He said: Like flowers, we do not all thrive under similar conditions. Roses and heliotropes and geraniums must have sunshine, but if you want your fuschias to grow you must keep them in a shady nook." After the sermon a woman came up to him, her face glowing with pleasura, 'Oh, doctor, I am so grateful for that sermon,' she said, clasping his hand and shaking it warmly. His heart glowed for a moment-only for a moment, though. 'Yes,' she went on fervently, "I never knew before what was the matter with my fuschias." "

A WILD RIDE

Wm. Errixson Beats His Way 36 Miles in an Engine's Cowcatcher, The man who rode in a cowcatcher bids fair to become a hero among the knights of the road, as well as a marvel to railroad men, says the San Francisco Examiner. His name is William Errixson and his years are twentytwenty years as replete with adventure as a chapter out of a dime novel. Beating his way over hundreds of miles of territory has become second nature to him, and a trip on a brakebeam a pos-

But wherein William Errixson has transcended all the feats of the migrating hobo is that he was the first and only individual of his kind to conceive and execute the audacious project of caging himself within a cowcatcher and beating a ride in that perilous and essentially melodramatic situation. It was thus that he traveled from Winnemucca to Wadsworth. He had to be careful in selecting his locomotive to find one that had no forward steam exhaust. A locomotive exhausting steam toward the cowcatcher would have literally cooked him alive. He has some knowledge of locomotives, and so was able to pick out one with only side exhausts. Inside of the cowcatcher there is only a small space, and he found it necessary to sit upon timbers which are used for braces for the frame of the cowcatcher. Then he was in a half-recumbent position, his hands clutched around the cowcatcher bars, while the train was running fast. Being ahead of the drivers and the machinery he was jolted terrifically by what is technically known as the "fall" of the locomotive. Every little depression in the track permits the dead weight of many tons of iron and steel to fall, with the added speed and momentum of the train, and then in an instant rebound, which is followed by another fall. As the track through Nevada is not level much of the way. Errixson, in his novel cyrie, had the most thorough shaking up of any man who ever stole a ride west of the Rocky Mountains. The air was intensely hot and the smell of the oil and other odors from the locomoti a was stifling. The distance between Winnemucca and Wadsworth is only thirty-six miles, but there are eight s ps, and it seemed an age of suffering to Errixson before he reached a place where he could climb down and out from his perch. He climbes under the cowcatcher in the plt of the roundhouse and got out in Wadsworth. His back was wrenched; his arms seemed ready to fall from their sockets and his eyes were bloodshot. He staggered from the train undetected and fell half exhausted in the sage brush, where he slept several hours, awaking with a terrible start from a dream in which he was once more speeding over the alkaline wastes, with the machinery of the locomotive pounding terrifically just back of him.

What Bicycle Gear Means. The man on the safety covers as much ground in one revolution as the

This Ricycle Rider Is a Wonder. Probably one of the most unique features at race meets in various parts the west this season is Arthur Roadhouse. He is 12 years old and lives & De Kalb, Ill. He was born without legs and with only one arm. As will be seen in the accompanying illustration. he rides a drop frame bicycle with the seat post tube cut down. The driving mechanism, which is attached to his wheel, is his own design. He rides at nearly all the race meets in his locality, and rides a half-mile in 1.30.-Philadelphia Press.

Sulphuric Acid Dissolves Lost Tools. An experiment of great interest to oil well contractors was recently made at the old Fuller well, in Butler County. Pa. A full set of tools and two sets of slips that were lost in the well were completely dissolved by the application of sulphuric acid. The acid was put down in the hole with a bailer, and after it had been in some time it was discovered the acid, which covered the tools, had eaten or dissolved the Iron and steel. Water was then put down, and the acid all bailed out, leaving the hole clear and ready to begin the wors of drilling deeper.
