Hinchinbrooke; G. W. Armstrong, city. The defence claimed that plaintiff is and was very deaf, and that there was contri butory negilence on the part of the plaintiff. Plaintiff, on the other hand, held crossings, and that even a blind man has a right to be on the streets, and to protection from reckless drivers.

Miss Margaret Chadwick, plaintiff, was the first witness. She lives on Earl street, with her sister, wife of Rev. Dr. Bell, of Queen's university. She described the accident, and said that when she was knocked down, she had an indistinct idea that she saw horses' feet. Did not try to get up, as she was stunned by the blow. Two men came along and tried to put her on her feet, but she could not stand. Sh had looked up and down Johnston street to see if any teams were coming, before she started to cross the crossing. The sun was shining and she had her parasol up shading her face, a little to the left side, when she was struck. Plaintiff has never since been on the street until vesterday, but has been out in the yard. Her sight, previously good, has been affected by the accident, and she is in pain most of the time.

Cross examined by Mr. Whiting, plain tiff said she remembered distinctly looking up and down Johnston street before going on to the crossing. Did not see any men down Johnston, nor any woman up the street. Did not look to see if anything was coming along Clergy street. When she started to cross she could not see in front of her, because her parasol was over her face, a little towards the lett side, thus preventing her from seeing anything coming towards her. She continued to hold the parasol thus until she fell. Did not see a waggon when she was struck. and her idea that she saw horses' feet when she fell was very indistinct. Did not know what struck her. Even after she fell she did not see a waggon. She was stunned by the blow. When she recovered consciousness she was sitting on the ground. The blow she received was behind and a little to the side. It was the left hip-bone that was broken. Her sight was perfectly good on the day of the accident and there was nothing, that she knew of, to prevent her keeping a good lookout. She was facing Princess street, to the north, and whatever struck her must have struck Thomas W. Darling saw part of the accident. Was on Johnston street going towards Clergy, in company with H. C. Bates. Were about opposite A. Gunn's house. Saw a lady, apparently riding in a farmer's rig. Her body was tilted back as though she had lost her balance and was falling out. Thought she would recover herself, but she fell. The driver's face was turned away from witness, tothe left. The waggon did not stop at once. It was moving rapidly. The rig stopped a short distance away from the scene of the accident. Witness thought a passenger had fallen out and the driver didn't know it. The lady tumbled about on the road, after she fell, and apparently tried to get up. Witness and his companion went to her aid and carried her into Mr. Dobbs' house on Johnston street. Plaintiff was the lady referred to. Cross-examined by Mr. Whiting witness said if plaintiff was facing north towards Princess street, the rig must have passed in front of her; could not describe the rig. It was his impression that it was a fourwheeled vehicle. Saw no parasol nor umbrella. Could not say what caused the accident. It was after the accident when the driver's face was turned away. He might have been looking at the woman when she fell. Did not see the vehicle strike her. The horse was not going faster than the majority of horses are driven At the residence of MRS. S. BOUCHER, 102 nees called a jog—decidedly faster than a Barrack street, FRIDAY, OCT. 25rd, the

H. C. Bates swore that he and the preceding witness were about forty or fifty yards away from the corner when Mr. Darling called his attention to the accident. He looked and saw an old woman rolling in the dust. Saw a rig on the other side of the street, going east on the northerly side of Johnston street, a considerable distance past the crossing. There were two persons in it, and a boy was driving. Both were standing up, and the driver was looking over his shoulder, and in the act of pulling up the horse. to the woman, and witness asked her if she was hurt, but got no answer. No connection can be traced between the defective sight of plaintiff and the accident. Her general health has been impaired by the long confinement to bed. Think patient may be able to walk with a cane. Such an injury is usually caused by a fall, but is not likely to be caused directly by collision with a vehicle. Mr. Carson called on witness to ask how plaintiff was getting on.

To Mr. Whiting : In the case of an old person the neck of thigh bone is very brittle. It is about three-quarters of an inch in diameter. The fracture might have been caused by a fall, if plaintiff had started and stepped back, falling in doing so. The blow felt by plaintiff may have been caused by such a fall. A person becoming unconscious might not recollect how the hurt was received. Under ordinary circumstances a patient would be able to walk in a few weeks. It depends on the courage of the patient. Miss Chadwick, 1e-called, said she was not riding in the cars at the time of the sulte. A portion of the testimony of defendant under examination some time ago, was read to the jury by Mr. McIntyre, and there the plaintiff's case was rested. Mr. Whiting submitted that the plain tiff had not made out a case sufficiently strong to go to the jury, and quoted cases to prove that pedestrians must be as care ful not to be run over, as drivers must be not to run over pedestrians, and that in cases in which equal negligence can be shown on the part of the plaintiff as on that of defendant, a non-suit should be entered. Mr. Whiting further contended that it lay with plaintiff to prove that the cart had run into plaintiff, and that plaintiff had not run into the cart Plaintiff admitted contributory negligence on her own part, and had failed to estab lish proof of such negligence on the part of defendant. None of the witnesses would state that there had been any contact between plaintiff and the cart. Mr. McIntyre argued to the contrary Plaintiff was struck on the left side, and was the blow that knocked her down, and it must have been struck by defendant's horse and cart, which was on the illegal side of the street. Several cases were quoted as bearing on that under considera-

IT WAS A FINE TREAT.

The Boston Quintette Club in the Opera House Last Night. Last night's concert, given to Kingston through the enterprise of Mr. Telgmann, was of such unusual excellence that it is to be regretted all the seats of the opera house were not filled, one-third of the orchestra chairs being empty. The rest of the house held an appreciative audience, which demanded from the artists all the recalls that might be given, the applause dictated by true admiration without the spirit of greed usually ascribed to Canadian audiences. An authority in matters musical in this country once said that wherever Mr. Ryan went, from Canada's northern tour to Florida, and from Boston to San Francisco, he would find a friend every town, and the benevolent white haired head was a very welcome sight last night. Mr. Ryan is a master of several instruments, but he expresses a distinct preference for the clarinette, a preference which he shows in even the manner of handling them. His solo was of course applauded to the eche, his reply being his old favorite, Robin Adair, With the Quintette's first number a disappointment manifested itself in the audience in the first few bars, but the bowing speedily mended itself, and there was no further anticipation of a decline of former excellence; in the Tschaikowsky number the exquisite interpretation and finished execution held the listeners breathless until the last note had faded. In that number, especially, the beauty of the instrument held by the second violin and his management of it brought to mind all that William Matthews has ever written on the subject. The flute solo was enthusiastically encored, and the ever popular Boccherini Menuet had to be in part repeated. But the 'cellist, Blumenberg, was, as he ever is, the centre of the evening, a master who can hold spell-bound any audience in any land. Signor Quintano is a young violinist who is working steadily forward to the front ranks, and he has earned many golden opinions from masters of technique; his response to the demand of the andience showed his complete command over technical difficulty. Miss you if you want clothing, but come to the Alma Powell, announced as soprano but Star Hall, as everything must go before the | with the quality of a mezzo, showed to best advantage in her first number, each note true and round, her method betraying parently the German school. A Valuable Invention. Attention is called to the advertisement man. on our 1st page headed "What is Oxygenator." It is the name of a medicine manufactured by the Oxygenator Co., of Toronto, who have procured the sole right to escape, etc. They are almost certain to manufacture this medicine in Canada. It is a transparent liquid of a slight acid taste, and quite pleasant to take. "Oxy genator" is described as a microbe dis troyer or germ exterminator, and if it is a fact (as scientists tell us) that all diseases Behan said he had received a number of Read this list of reductions in men's are caused by microbes which are living applications from resident engineers who pants: A $1 pair for 90c., a $1.25 pair germs in the human system. The Words Were Different. When the list of accounts, as made up by city clerk Flanagan, was being discussfever. He spent three years in the Royal ed by the finance committee yesterday afternoon, the members were quite mystified over two clauses which Ald. Drennan with Dr. E. H. Smythe, conducted the interpreted as "T. C. Ikehara, charcoal case of Crawford vs. Canada Life Assurance | works, $--"; "W. S. Gordon, charcoal Co. at the fall assizes yesterday, left for works, $---." Being unable to account for the clauses they were struck off the list. Before the council meeting in the who is attending the sessions of the fall evening Ald. Drennan asked the city clerk assizes bere, is an ex-member of the for information concerning the "charcoal Queen's Own Rifles, and went through clauses." He was shown the two bills as the north-west campaign of 1885, with that embodied in the finance report, for "clerical work" performed by T. C. Ikehara and W. S. Gordon.

ARE STILL IN DOUBT AS TO CON-VICT HEWELL'S DESERTS. Was it Right to Kill Under the Circumstances ?-The Hamilton Times Man is Very Much Excited And Unfair-Facts That Cannot be Gainsaid.

The penitentiary shooting case is still under discussion. The London Advertiser submits that the question to be decided is: "Was it right to kill him under such circumstances? Might not the tragedy have been avoided, if the prisoner had been first permitted to remain in his cell for a period to reflect ever the folly of his declared resistance to the decree of the The prisoner was left for two hours to get over his frenzy and return to reason, without result. Meantime at least twenty prisoners were being excited in the corri-dor, the foulest of language was being tolerated and the warden's authority so defied that the white prisoners were declaring there was no virtue in obedience, that the "nigger" could defy the guards when a white man would be summarily suppressed. Action had to be taken for the very existence of discipline. The Stratford Beacon thinks if any one of the critics were in the chief keeper's position at the time he would have done exactly as Mr. Hughes did. There was no time for choosing a safe spot to fire at-it was a question of life or death with the keeper, and in self-defence he fired. The London News suggests it would be ust as well to have an official investigation before starting to bombard the guard with editorial brickbats. The practice of shooting convicts unnecessarily is nototo be commended, but there may be circumstances other than those brought out at the inquest, which will put an entirely new light on the affair. The Hamilton Times remarks: "We cannot believe that Sir Oliver Mowat approves of the murder. Hewell was in a cell and he could not get away. There was no need to shoot him. He could have been left alone until his temper cooled. He could have been knocked down with a club. If three men could not handle him, ten might have been detailed for the purpose. The shooting was not done in selfdetence, or of necessity. It was murder, and the fact that the man killed was a friendless scoundrel, with a black skin, does not alter the quality of the crime." The amount of discretion a man can exercise two hundred miles away, when his life is not in danger, is remarkable. The Times overlooks the fact that the convict was given ample time to cool down: that clubs were not a terror to Hewell, who had attempted several murders, exercising the strength of a wild animal. The suggestion of ten men being put into a small cell to fight a convict is too absurd for consideration. They would be bunched in a corner without room to move and dodge, and at the mercy of the prisoner, one of the best athletes in the country, who was jumping and springing about like a tiger. The Times' man is very brave in his mind's eve in his he is again very unfair. The shears had been aimed at Hughes' abdomen, and fell at his feet. Five seconds later he would have received a horrible and fatal wound. How many men and women have to be offered as a sacrifice for a frenzied brute like Hewell before his victims exercise their duty of detence for the sake of their own lives, for their families and their fellow officers? The Times argues that a crazy man should be allowed to go on murdering, for that would be the result of mild treatment. He was as dangerous with the shears as most men with a revolver. Where does the humanity come in, if not on the side of the innocent victim of the vilest brute that ever entered prison gates? If the editor of the Times heard a detail of two of his crimes against women, he would be a different feeling
