PONY EXPRESS RIDING.

Veteran of the Pioneer Service of the Plains Tells About It.

"There has been a great deal of glamor and romance thrown around the pony express business in the days before the properties in the camp A large lot of ore awaits shipment over the new Red Mountain Railway. Write for prospectus.

advent of the railreads, "said T. R. Miller, one of the corps of riders who carried the mail across the plains in 1858, but the fact is, there was little romance about it, and very little else but hard

> "I commenced to ride for the express company in 1858, when the route was laid out and the company organized, and continued to ride until Butterfield came up and took the contract, and the telegraph line was built. My route was from Egan Canyon to Antelope Springs, Nev. The riders had to ride from sixty to eighty miles. On my section I had two relays, and used to make the trip in from six to eight hours. There was always more or less danger from the Indians, but when we met them we' either ran away from them, crawled around them, or fought. The danger has been greatly magnified. The country was so big and the number of Indians so comparatively small that we had to run into a band then one white man was as good as ten "Our stations were not fortified at all They were log cabins or sod houses, with three or four men in each, and though they were burned over and over again, they were rebuilt immediately, and no serious loss or inconvenience to the ser vice was occasioned.

before there was any serious danger, and

"We knew just when to expect the rider from the next station, and the horses were always ready, so that all we had to do was to change the mail from one horse to another, and we were off. It was the same at the relay stations. The horses were always ready, and the only delay was in taking a drink of water or a cup of coffee, and the mail was on its way.

"It was simply hard riding, a cool head and a keen eye that was required. Once in a while the men were caught. have a scar or two myself to remember the Indians by; but on the whole the danger was not excessive, and as for romance there was nothing of it. In 1861 the Indians were specially troublesome, and some hard fights resulted: but as they never remained long in the same place they could not do a very great deal

"The first trial of the pony express was the delivery of Buchanan's message in the spring of 1857. Our company, which had the route from St. Joe, via Salt Lake City, was the one which was afterward operated by Ben Holliday. Butterfield's route was through Arizona We had the common mountain ponies, and Butterfield had high-bred horses. We took the message right through, and when Butterfield arrived at Mojave he found the message coming back from San Francisco. Butterfield ran the southern route until 1860, when he pulled off and established a line of coaches from St. Joe to San Francisco, via Salt Lake. In 1861 they commenced to build the telegraph lines. "I saw a statement recently that there are only five survivors of the pony express riders. That is a mistake. There are a number of others. Besides myself I know of Frank Low, now in Cripple Creek; Erastus Egan, son of Major Egan, of Egan Canyon; James White, John Fisher and Sam Gilson, the discoverer of the beds of asphalt in Utah. "There was always excitement enough in our work, and nearly all of us had narrow escapes of one kind or another. We had to make time, to look out for Indians, and sometimes to race with storms which were likely to bar our progress, but all these things soon became matters of course. We mounted our ponies and pounded away until we reached our stations, and then lay down and waited until our time came next. It was hard work sometimes, and pleasant at others, very much the same as the other occupations of human existence."

A Happy Mistake. "It might not always be pleasant to be taken for some one else," said the man who was asked for an experience, "but in my case it was the most delightful incident of my life. You see it happened in this way. I was going to visit an interior town of some size, and my neighbor, old Joe Peters, who was rich and grabbed and eccentric, but not a bad sort withal, asked me to call on a sister he had living there,

"I ain't seen her in twenty years," he said to me, "and like enough she don't care a pleayune whether she ever sees o hears of me or not, but I'd kind of like to know how she's fixed since her husband died, a spell ago. You might skirmish around and see how the land lays.' "When I reached F., the western town in which Peter's folks lived, I attended to my business first and then went to call on his sister.

"Now I am not in the habit of using cards when I make a call, like swell folks, but I had a business card and it struck me it would be about right to send that in to the folks and wait in the parlor to see what came of it. "Well, such screeching and shouting never heard in my life, and I began to think I had struck a lunatic asylum, and a few minutes later I was sure of the room and they all began calling me Uncle Joe, and hugging me within an "'One at a time,' I said, for though the mother was handsome, the girls were ust peaches and cream, and it was hard for me to tell them that I was not Uncle Joe. I had sent in his business card instead of my own, and that's how they made the mistake. The girls seemed to think it a good joke, but the widow was awfully flustrated. However, the next time I kissed her it wasn't any mistake." Meaning of Colors. White is the color of light, purity, innocence, faith, joy, and life. Black means mourning, wickedness and death. Red signifies fire, divine love and wisdom, Blue stands for heaven, truth from a celestial origin, constancy and fidelity. Yellow or gold is the symbol of the sun. of marriage and faithfulness; in a bad sense yellow signifies inconsistency, jealousy and deceit. Green, the emerald, is the color of spring, hope, particularly of the hope of immortality and of victory, as the color of the laurel and paim. Violet signifies love, and truth, or passion and suffering. Purple and scarlet signify things good and true from a celestial origin.

Sawdust Bricks. Sawdust is turned into transportable fuel in Germany by a very simple process. It is heated under high steam pressure till the resinous ingredients become sticky, when it is pressed into bricks. One man with a two horse-power machine can turn out 9,000 bricks a day.

aside into the rubbish heap, but I'll tell you a little story to show that so long as the paper exists and the type on it can be read its advertising power remains. "There walked into my office three weeks ago a woman afflicted with the ills that I cure and who wanted a course of treatment. She came a long way and was prepared to stay in town and give my skill a full opportunity. I cured her, got $150 of her good money and sent her home re-to me. She had read one of my advertisements. Her husband's business being fitting and putting down carpets, he was taking up an old carpet in a Buffalo home. Under the carpet was a layer of newspapers. He happened to glance at one and his eye felt on the name of the disease from which his wife suffered. He read the advertisement, which was mine, tore the 25 Years before the piece from the paper, and took it home for his wife to read. She had it in her pocketbook and gave it to me. It was old and yellow, and there was nothing on it to tell from what newspaper it had been torn. But it demonstrates that you can never tell when an advertisement is dead."
