The photograph is so perfect and the illusion so complete in every detail shivers, but Parisians think it delightful, and a sensational actress has arranged to have her photograph taken in exactly the same manner, while her disappointed rivals are berating their managers for lack of enterprise. In his photographing of animals this juggler of the camera has produced some results which Scotchmen would call uncanny. One of these is of a small snake in the act of awallowing an elephant. Most of his animal pictures are equally pleasing, or unpleasant, just as you happen to feel about them. He has handled babies with as little tenderness, and one of his photographs shows a pyramid of youngsters piled one on another in haphazard fashion without regard for their personal welfare. Just what processes he uses to obtain these remarkable pictures the photographer has not revealed, but it is known that he uses an intricate combination of mirrors, and that they are not built up in the old manner known to almost every amateur camerist. Even by making two exposures on one plate some strange results can be obtained, such as that of a man holding his own head in his hand or playing cards with himself, but the use of mirrors makes it possible to obtain these photographs at one exposure. Although this new development of photographic trickery seems novel, it is only the elaboration of an idea which a The COPP CLARK CO., Ltd.,

There is a practical value in such pictures, for they show in one photograph just how you look in several positions. In fact, you have to look closely at these pictures to distinguish that you are looking at only one person and not a group half a dozen. It is not probable that this Parisian novelty in photographs will be as much in demand here as in Europe's gayest capital, but it will serve to break the last strand of faith which has heretofore been but in the reliability of the camera's
