her usual Christmas present of a boar's head from her grandson, the German emperor. His majesty also sent two immense hampers of German cakes and confections. The Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Goths (the Duke of Edinburg) sent to his mother a number of cases of wine and sweet meats. The queen, although now practically a total abstainer from intoxicating drinks, takes a glass of a kind of rare tokay win on special occasions such as Christmas Princess Beatrice (Princess Henry Battenberg) is passing the holidays with the queen, her mother, at Windsor Castle, as are also the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, the Marquis and Marchioness of orne and the Duchess of Albany. The prince and princess of Wales entertaining at Sandringham only the duke and duchess of Fyfe, (Princess Louise of Wales) and others immediately within the family circle. The princess of Wales was at Marlborough house, her London residence until Monday last. She was actively engaged in shopping in company with her daughter Princess Victoria and Prince Charles of Denmark. Most of their purchases were Christmas presents, which they bought a large quantity. Christmas day was fine and mild Great Britain. The country seats were scenes of great family gatherings.

financial commission a firm basis for an immediate revision of taxation and are going to seek to obtain it. There is the keenest contest among allections to bring the question before parliament. Besider Mr. Dillon, John Redmond will move an amendment to the address asking earliest redress of the disproportion contributed by Ireland to the imperial exchequer. A similar amendment will be moved in the house of lords from the unionist side. Considerable interest is manifested in parliamentary circles as to how the government will meet this demand, backed, as it will be by nationalists and unionists combined. A. J. Balfour, first lord of treasury and government leader in the house of commons and Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, chancellor of the exchequer are desirous of re-trying the conclusions of the financial commission and will ask the house to appoint a special committee to take further evidence. Both Mr. Balfour and Sir Michael Hicks-Beach rely upon proving the correctness of the report of Sir David Barbour, which questioned the conclusions of the majority of the commission. They seem also to intend inpugning the evidence of financial experts like Sir Robert Hamilton, Sir Robert Giffen and Col. H. E. White and Col. R. G.
