It is both effective and rapid in its action, and may be 'on with perfect safety for other tonics, such as Iron, Cinchona, Calisaya, &c., and unlike these IT NEVER CON-STIPATES.

In cases of sleeplessness from exhaustion or fatigue it is invaluable, producing sound and refreshing sleep, without the distress ing sensation so common after Opiates, Bromides, and Hydrate of Chloral.

It has been prescribed throughout Europe for years by the most eminent physicians, and has been pronounced the most powerful restorer of the vital forces.

By THOMAS HARDY.

It was often said and oftener surmised that her early maidenhood to demonstrate what lay hidden within her, like metal in a mine.

the was the daughter of a small farmer in St. Mary's, one of the Scilly Isles, who had on her education, by sending her to the mainland for two years. At 19 she was entered at the Training College for Elementary Teachers, and at 21 nominated to a school in the country, near Exeter, whither she proceeded after the Christmas examination and holi-

The months passed by from wayer to spring and summer, and Baptista applied herself to her new duties as best she could, till an uneventful year had elapsed. Then an air of abstraction pervaded her bearing the transfer of the same and the street of the same and she showed the traits of a person who had something on her mind. A widow, by name

Mrs. Wace, in whose house Baptista Trewthen had been provided with a sitting room and bedroom till the school house should be built, noticed this change in her youthful tenant's manner, and at last ventured to press her with a few questions,

"It has nothing to do with the place, nor with you," said Miss Trewthen. "Then it is the salary?"

"No, nor the salary."

"Then it is something you have heard from home, my dear." Baptista was silent for a "It is Mr. Heddegan," she murmured. "Him they used to call David Heddegan before he got his money." "And who is the Mr. Heddegan they used to call David?" "An old bachelor at Hugh Town St. Mary's, with no relations whatever, who lives about a stone's throw from father's. When I was a child he used to take me on his knee and say he'd marry me some day. Now I am a woman the jest has turned earnest, and he is anxious to do it. And father and mother says I can't do better than have him." "He's well off?"

"Yes-he's the richest man we know-as a friend and neighbor."

"How much older did you say he was than

"I didn't say. Twenty years at least." "And an unpleasant man in the bargain,

"No; he's not unpleasant." "Well, child, all I can say is that I'd resist any such engagement if it's not palatable to ye. You are comfortable here, in my little house, I hope. All the parish like ye, and I've never been so cheerful since my husband left me to wear his wings as I've been with ye as my lodger."

The school mistress assured her landlady that she could return the sentiment. "But here comes my perplexity," she said. "I don't like keeping school. Ah, you are surprised-you didn't suspect it. That's because I've concealed my feeling. Well, I simply hate school. I don't care for children-they are unpleasant, troublesome little things, whom nothing would delight so much as to hear that you had fallen down dead. Yet I would even put up with them if it was not for the inspector. For three months before his visit I didn't sleep soundly. And the committee of council are always changing the code, so that you don't know what to teach and what to leave untaught. I think father and mother are right. They say I shall never excel as a school mistress if I dislike the work so, and that therefore I ought to get settled by marrying Mr. Heddegan. Between us two, I like him better than school; but I don't like him quite so much as to wish to marry him."

These conversations, once begun, were continued from day to day, till at length the young girl's elderly friend and landlady threw in her opinion on the side of Miss Trew then's parents. All things considered, she declared, the uncertainty of the school, the labor, Baptista's natural dislike for teaching, it would be as well to take what fate offered and make the best of matters by wedding her father's old neighbor and prosperous

The Easter holidays came round, and Baptista went to spend them as usual in her native isle, going by train as far as she could and crossing by packet from Penzance. When she returned in the middle of April her face wore a more settled aspect.

"Well?" said the expectant of Mrs. Wace. "I have agreed to have him as my husband," said Baptista, in an off hand way. matter is settled."

Mrs. Wace commended her; but Baptista did not care to dwell on the subject; so that allusion to it was very infrequent between them. Nevertheless, among other things, the box and gave her a bouquet tied in ribshe repeated to the widow from time to bon and secured by a splendid sapphire time in monosyllabic remarks that the wed- | mounted with diamonds. ding was really impending; that it was arranged for the summer, and that she had | pic-nic hams, from 6 to 8 lbs., not canvassgiven notice of leaving the school at the ed, 12tc; rolls or half rolls new fresh bacon, August holidays. It was the end of July-dry, too dry, even for the season, the delicate green herbs and vegetables that grew in this favored end of the kingdom tasting rather of the watering pot than of the pure, fresh moistures from the skies. Baptista's boxes were packed, and one Saturday morning she departed by wagonette to the station and thence by train to Penzance, from which port she was, as usual, to cross the water immediately to her home and become Mr. Heddegan's wife on the Wednesday of the week following.

She might have returned a week sooner. But though the wedding day had loomed so near and the bans were out, she delayed her departure till this last moment, saying it was not necessary for her to be home long beforehand. As Mr. Heddegan was older than herself, she said, she was to be married in her ordinary summer bonnet and gray silk frock, and there were no preparations to make that had not been amply made by ber

Is Cholera Coming

The possible advent of cholera on this side of the Atlantic makes it of the utmost importance that proper precaution shall be taken to meet a foe so uncompromising and powerful. The liver and its condition at once becomes a matter of serious consideration, for upon its normal action depends most largely that degree of health and vigor that can surely withstand the assaults of disease. No remedy can equal Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut. They at once strike at the source of disease, remove obstructions in the liver, give tone and digestive power to the stomach, reinvigorating the whole system. Sold by Polson & Co. and dealers everywhere.
